THE

FOLLIES OF A DAY; OR, THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO.

COMEDY, A

AS IT IS NOW PERFORMING AT THE

THEATRE-ROYAL,

COVENT-GARDEN.

FROM THE

FRENCH OF M. DE BEAUMARCHAIS.

BY THOMAS HOLCROFT.

AUTHOR OF DUPLICITY, A COMEDY, THE NOBLE PEASANT, AN OPERA, &c.

LONDON: Printed for G. G. and J. J. ROBINSON; PATER-NOSTER ROW.

M DCC LXXXV.

A D V E R T I S E M E N T.

THOUGH to thank the Public is to thank nobody, fince no particular Perfon takes this Sort of Compliments to himfelf, yet were I not to feel that Gratitude, which individually I know not where to pay, I were unworthy of paft, of prefent, or of future Favours.

An Author's Thanks to the World at large may be feen under two very different Afpects: For, to thank the Public is to tell the Public he is fuccefsful; which, fuppofing it true, it would be ftrange if they did not already know; it appears therefore only to be taking an Opportunity of indulging his Vanity: And yet to thank them feems his Duty, fince his Silence might not only be conftrued a want of Refpect, but an arrogant Self-confidence that, when they applauded or approved his Work, they only did him juftice. The Reader muft determine which of these Faces he will please to view,

I am fo well convinced that the best Writer stands in need of Indulgence, and that he only

iv ADVERTISEMENT.

only does well by Comparison, and might do much better, that I shall find little Mortification in subscribing to the Opinions of those who shall tell me I am in this latter Predicament.

Readers are divided into two Classes; the one will allow an Author much more than he merits, and the other much lefs; but the principal Excellencies of The Follies of a Day are so known to be another's Right, that for me to claim them would be ridiculous. Some, however, have affirmed that it is a mere Tranflation, who have never feen, read, or heard the Original; if they had, indeed, they would have been still more culpable. Few will trouble themselves to examine the precise Extent of my Claims; nor, if they did, would they have an Opportunity 'till M. de Beaumarchais schall think proper to publish LA FOLLE JOURNEE. The Public in general are so willing to overlook Defects, and applaud wherever they can, that to complain of, or be angry at the Few who feek for, and with to find, Errors only, can proceed alone from that Self-love which is so inherent and irritable

A D V E R T I S E M E N T. v irritable in all bosons, and so difficult to fubdue.

To enumerate all the Obstacles encountered and overcome in bringing this Comedy on the English Stage, would be to indulge this Vanity; which it is every wife Man's Pride, and every prudent Man's Interest to refift. It may, however, afford fome Pleasure to be informed, that, finding it imposfible to procure a Copy of the original French, though a Journey to Paris was undertaken expressly for that Purpose, the Copy made use of in the composing The Follies of a Day, was taken by Memory, only, during eight or nine Representations; that I furnished the Plot, Incidents, Entrances, and Exits, and gave some other occasional Hints; that the remainder was the Work of a young Frenchman, whole Talents and whole Heart are an Ornament and an Honour to his Country; and that, after it was brought to England and received by Mr. Harris, it was translated, cast, copied, recopied, studied, and, in one of its longest Parts, re-studied, and played in little more than a Month.

The

vi ADVERTISEMENT.

The Attention and Care of Mr. Harris, and the Merits of the refpective Performers in playing, as they did, under fuch Circumftances, need not my Encomiums. Had the Town known the peculiar Exertions, of those especially who performed the longest and most effential Parts, the applause would have been endles. From me they are justly entitled to my warmest and funcerest Thanks.

•

Upper Mary-le-Bone Streef, FEE. 21, 1785.

• •

PROLOGUE,

Spoken by Mr. DAVIES.

O-NIGHT, a Child of Chance is hither brought, Who could be neither borrow'd, begg'd, nor bought; Nay, fo alert was faid to be the Droll, 'Twas well affirm'd he was not to be stole; But hence difpatch'd, back'd by Apollo's warrant, A messenger has kidnapp'd this Wag-errant; Poetic Fugitive, has hither dragg'd him, And, fafely here arriv'd, has now ungagg'd him, To plead before this Court, his whole amenance; Where, should you fentence him to public Penance, Oh, fad reverfe ! how would he foam and fret, And figh for Paris and his fweet Soubrette ! Where twice ten thousand tongues are proud to greet him, And wing'd Applause, on tip-toe, stands to meet him : Where the grim Guard, in nightly rapture, stands, And grounds his musquet to get at his hands; Where the retentive Pitt, all prone t'adore him, Repeat his Bon mots half a bar before him; While every Bel-Esprit, at every hit, Grows fifty-fold more confcious of his Wit.

If far fetch'd and dear bought give Trifles worth, Sure you'll applaud our FIGARO's fecond birth. Nought of his prefent merit must we fay; Bear but in mind, OUR Day's a SPANISH Day. Cupid, in warmer Climes, urg'd by the Grape, Calls not each petty violence a Rape ! But oft his Votaries leaves intoxicate, Hence FIGARO himfelf is illegitimate.

Sanction'd by you, howe'er, this little Blot, So much in fashion, will be soon forgot; That Signature which each kind hand bestows, Shall make him well receiv'd where'er he goes !

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Count Almaviva, Don Guzman, Doctor Bartholo, Figaro, Antonio, Bafil, Doublefee, Bounce, Mr. Lewis. Mr. Quick. Mr. Wilson. Mr. Bonnor. Mr. Bonnor. Mr. Edwin. Mr. Wewitzer. Mr. Thompson. Mr. Stevens.

Courier, Crier of the Court, Servant, Page, Mr. Jones. Mr. Bates. Mr. Newton. Mrs. Martyr.

Countefs, Marcelina, Agnes, Sufan, Mrs. Bates. Mrs. Webb. Mifs Wewitzer. Mifs Younge.

Counfellors, Guards, Vaffals.

The Passages put between inverted Commas are omitted in the Representation.

THE

FOLLIES OF A DAY:

A C T I.

SCENE, the Caffle of Count ALMAVIVA. FIGARO and SUSAN.

(Figaro measuring the chamber with a wand.)

Figaro. E IGHTEEN feet by twenty-fix, good. Susan. What art thou so busy about? Figaro. Measuring, to try if the bed our noble Lord intends to give us will stand well here. Susan. In this chamber! Figaro. Yes. Susan. I won't lie in this chamber.

Figaro. Why fo? Sufan. I tell you I won't lie in this chamber, Figaro. Well but Sufan. I don't like it. Figaro. Your reafon.

R

Sufan.

Sufan. What if I have no reason ?---What if I don't chuse to give my reason?

Figaro. " Ah, ah !— Thus it is when once they find they have us fast.

Sufan. " Are you, or are you not my most obe-" dient very humble fervant ?

Figaro. ⁴ Your flave——(Bows very low.) Sulan. ⁴ Oh!

Figaro. "But wherefore take exception to the most convenient room in the whole house?

Sufan. "Yes, yes !—The most convenient !— " (Satirically.)

Figaro. " If during the night my Lady should " be taken ill, fhe rings her bell, and crack !---" in two fteps thou art standing at her side.-----" In the morning when my Lord wakes, he calls, " I ftart, and pop-three fkips and I am there. Sufan. " Very true-And in the morning when " my Lord has fent thee on fome fine errand of an " hour long, he starts from his bed as soon as Mr. " Figaro's back is turn'd, and crack !--- in three " skips-he-(kgnificantly.) Figaro. " He? Susan. "Yes-he----Figaro. " (Keeps rubbing his forehead and looking " at Sulan.) He! Sulan. " He !---Doft thou feel any thing ? Figaro. " (Presses his finger and thumb against his " forehead) Buttons !--- In pairs !----- Mushrooms " sprout not so suddenly-Yes, yes-it's a fruitful fpot." Susan. Thou knowest how our generous Count when he by thy help obtained Rofina's hand, and made her Countefs of Almaviva, during the first transports of love abolished a certain gothic right -----

Figaro.

Á C O M È D Y: 3

Figaro. Of fleeping the first night with every Bride.

Susan. Which as Lord of the Manor he could claim.

Figaro. Know it !- To be fure I do, or I would not have married even my charming Sufan in his Domain.

Susan. Tired of prowling among the ruffic beauties of the neighbourhood he returned to the Caftle-

Figaro. And his wife.

Susan. And thy wife-(Figaro stares)-Doft thou understand me?

Figaro. Perfectly !

Susan. And endeavours, once more, fecretly to purchase from her, a right which he now most fincerely repents he ever parted with.

Figaro. Most gracious Penitent!

Susan. This is what he hints to me every instant, and this the faithful Basil, honest agent of his pleafures, and my most noble music master, every day repeats with my lefton.

Figaro. Bafil!

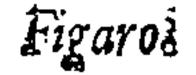

Susan. Bafil.

Figaro. Indeed! But if tough ashen plant or supple-jack twine not round thy lazy fides, Rafcal—

Susan: Ha, ha, ha! Why wert thou ever wife enough to imagine the portion the Count intends to give us was meant as a reward for thy fervices? Figaro. I think I had fome reason to hope as much.

Susan. Lord, lord! What great fools are you men of wit!

Figaro. I believe fo. Susan. I am sure so, B 2

Figaro. Oh that it were poffible to deceive this arch Deceiver, this Lord of mine! To lead him into fome excellent fnare, pocket his gold and-Sufan. Hah! Now thou art in thy element-Gold and intrigue-Plots and purfes-But let him that diggeth a pit beware he-

Figaro. I'll try—" The Lover's jealoufy and the Hufband's fhame fhall not deter me"—Your trick, most noble Count, is common place—A thousand blundering Boobies have had art enough to filch a Wife from the fide of her steeping, simple, unfuspecting Spouse, and if he complained, to redress his injuries with a cudgel—But to turn the tables on this Poacher, make him pay for a delicious morfel he shall never taste, infect him with fears for his own honor, to— Susan. (The bell rings) Hark ! My Lady is awake —I must run, for she has several times strictly charged me to be the first at her bedside the morning of my marriage.

Figuro. Why the first?

Sufun. The old faying tells us, that to meet a young Bride the first on the morning of her wedding-day is lucky to a neglected wife. (Going.)

Figaro. Prithee, my Susan, give me a kiss before thou goest-It will quicken my wits, and lend imagination a new impulse.

Sufan. To be fure!—But if I kils my Lover today what will my Huíband fay to me to morrow? (fems to refuic, Figaro killes ber). Plhaw Figaro! when wilt thou cease to trifle thus from morning till night (playfully). Figaro. When I may trifle from night to morning (in the fame tone). Sufan. There, there—There's all the kiffes I shall give. (Kiffes her hand at him and runs, he purfues to the fide.)

Figare.

A C O M E D Y. 5

Figaro. Stop, stop, you cheating little knave; that was not the way you received them. (Returns) A fweet Girl! An Angel! Such wit! Such grace! and fo much prudence and modefty too !-- I am a happyfellow !---So Mr. Bafil ! Is it me, Rafcal, you mean to practice the tricks of your trade upon? -I'll teach you to put your spoon in my milk-But hold—Diffemble is the word—Feign we ignorance and endeavour to catch them in their own traps-I wondered why the Count, who had made me Steward and Inspector-general of the Castle, should change his mind fo fuddenly, and want to take me with him on his embaffy to Paris, there to institute me his Messenger in ordinary-Acunning contrivance that-He, Plenipotentiary in chief, I, a break-neck Politician, and Sufan, Lady of the back-stairs, Ambassadress of the bed-chamber-I dashing through thick and thin and wearing myself to a skeleton, for the good of my most gracious Lord's family, and he labouring, night and day, for the increase of mine-Really, most honorable Count, you are too kind-What to represent his Majesty and me both at once-It's too much, too much by half----- A moment's reflection friend Figaro on the events of the day-First, thou must promote the Sports and Feaffing already projected, that appearances may not cool, but that thy Marriage may proceed with greater certainty; next, keep off one madam Marcelina, whose liquorish mouth waters at thee, and to whom thou haft given a Promise of Marriage, in default of the repayment of certain borrowed Sums which it would be very convenient to thy affairs never more to mention-Talk of the Devil and----

B 3 · Enter

Enter Doctor BARTHOLO and MARCELINA.

Marcelina. Good-morrow to Mr. Bridegroom. Figaro. Good-morrow to madam Marcelina— What! My old fat friend the Doctor! Are you there?

Doctor. Yes, Knave's face.

Figaro. As witty, I perceive, and no doubt as wife as ever—And have you been complaifant enough to come thus far to fee me married?

Doctor. To see thee hang'd.

Figaro. Most kind Doctor-But who takes care of your Mule? I know you have as much mercy on your Beast as you have on your Patient.

Dester. Do you hear him?

Figaro. And you, gentle Marcelina, do you ftill with to marry me—What, becaufe I cannot fall in love with you, would you drive me to hate you? [Exit Figaro.]

Doctor. The Rascal will never mend.

Marcelina. 'Tis you, Doctor, will never mend—" You are fo eternally wife, dull and flow, " that when a Patient has need of your affiftance he may die before you get to him, like as for-" merly your Mistress got married in spite of your " precautions."

Doctor. Was it to entertain me thus agreeably that you fent for me in fuch hafte from Seville?

Marcelina. Not entirely for that.

Doctor. What then—Is any body ill? Is the Count indifposed?

Marcelina. No, it is the Countels who is indifpofed. Doctor. What the artful, the deceitful Rolina ? What's her diforder?

Marcelina,

7

Marcelina. A faithless Husband.

Dottor. A very common complaint indeed.

Marcelina. The Count forfakes her, and falls in love with every fresh face.

Doctor. I am glad of it-I am glad of it-I forefaw it-I thought Count Almaviva would revenge the wrongs of Doctor Bartholo.

Marcelina. After toying with a thousand neighbouring Beauties, he now returns to the castle to terminate the marriage of Sulan and Figaro.

Doctor. Which he himself has made necessary.

Marcelina. Oh no-But at which he wishes to act rather as a Principal than an Agent.

Doctor. In private with the Bride.

Marcelina. Even fo.

Doctor. She I suppose has no great objection. Marcelina. Charitable Doctor-Basil, however, her music master, who takes great pains to instruct her, fays to the contrary.

Doctor. Bafil! What is that other Rafcal here too ?---Why the house is a den of Thieves-- What does he do here?

Marcelina. All the mischief he can-He persecutes me with his odious love unceasingly; I cannot get rid of him.

Doctor. Marry him-I'll answer for his cure.

Marcelina. That's what he wants-But pray Doctor, why will not you get rid of me by the fame means? The claims of Justice and oaths out of number fhould-

Doctor. So fo fo fo-What is the matrimonial furor come upon you again ?

Marcelina. Our long loft fon, Fernando! the dear pledge of my virgin love! were he but found, perhaps-Doctor. And fo you fent for me to hear this stale rhodomontade? B₄ Marcelina

Marcelina. " And are you, now you have " loft your Rofina, as inflexible and unjuft as " ever ?"

Dottor. Pfhaw!

Marcelina. Well—Since you are determined never to marry me yourfelf, will you have the complaifance to aid me in marrying another?

Doctor. With all my heart!--With all my heart!--Marcelina. Ah! (curtfies).

Dozlor. But who? --- What miferable Mortal, abandoned of Heaven and Women---

Marcelina. Who but the amiable, the gay, the ever fprightly Figaro?

Doctor. Figaro ! That Rafcal ! Marcelina. Youthful and generous! Dollor. As a Highwayman. Marcelina. As a Nobleman-Doctor. Pshaw, impossible! what on the very day he is going to marry another? Marcelina. " Things more improbable have come to pals. Doctor. " But your motive? Marcelina. "For you, Doctor, I have no fe-Crets. Doctor: "Women feldom have for Doctors. Marcelina. " I own our fex, though timid, is " ardent in the pursuit of pleasure. There is, in " all our bofoms, a fmall still voice which uncea-" fing cries-Woman, be as beautiful as thou " canft, as virtuous as thou wilt, but, at all events, be conspicuous, be talk'd about; for ft thy Wildom, if thou haft it-if not for thy Folly.

Destor. " She utters Oracles—Well, well, accomplifh this, and I will engage you shall be talk'd about."

Marceling.

A C O M E D Y.

Marcelina. We must endeavour to work upon Susan by fear and shame, for the more obstinately she refuses the amorous offers of the Count, the more effectually she will ferve our purpose; disappointment and revenge will lead him to support my cause, and as he is sovereign Judge in his own Lordship, his power may make Figaro's promise of marriage to me valid.

Doctor. Promise-Has he given you any fuch promise?

Marcelina. A written one-You shall see it.

Doctor. By Galen, this is excellent! The rafcal fhall marry my old Houfe-keeper, and I fhall be revenged for the tricks he lately played me, and the hundred piftoles he contrived to cheat me of. Marcelina. (transported) Yes, yes, Doctor! I fhall have him! He fhall marry me! He fhall marry me!

Enter SUSAN, with a gown on her arm, and a cap and riband of the Countess, in her hand.

Susan. Marry you ! Who is to marry you ? Not my Figaro, I affure you, madam.

Marcelina. Why not me, as foon as you, madam?

Susan. Indeed! your most obedient, madam. Doctor. (aside) So now for a merry scolding match.—We were saying, handsome Susan, how happy Figaro must be in such a Bride—

(Susan curtsies to the Doctor.)

Marcelina. Not to mention the fecret fatisfaction of my Lord the Count. Sufan. Dear madam, you are fo abundantly kind.

Mar-

9

Marcelina. Not so abundant in kindness, as a liberal young Lord-But I own it is very natural, he should partake the pleasures he so freely beftows upon his Vaffals.

Sujan. (balf angry) Partake-Happily madam, your Envy is as obvious, and your Slander as falfe, as your Claims on Figaro are weak and ill founded.

Marcelino. " If they are weak, it is because I "wanted the art to strengthen them, after the " manner of madam.

Susan. "Yet madam has ever been reckoned a " mistress of her art.

Marcelina. "I hope, madam, I shall always " have your good word, madam. (Curtfies.) Sufan. "Oh, I can affure you, madam, you have nothing to regret on that fcore, madam."

(Curtfies mockingly.) Marcelina. The young Lady is really a very pretty kind of Perfon-

(with a contemptuous side glance.) Susan. Oh yes (mimicking) The young Lady is at least as pretty as the old Lady.

Marcelina. " And very respectable.

Susan. " Respectable! Oh no, that is the cha-" racteristic of a Duenna.

Marcelina " A Duenna! A Duenna! Doctor. (coming between them) "Come, come-Marcelina. " 1-I-You-your very humble " fervant, madam.

Susan. "Your most devoted, madam." Marcelina. Farewell, madam.

(Execut Doctor and Marcelina.) Sulan. Adieu, madam-this old Sibyl, becaufe fhe formerly tormented the infancy of my Lady, thinks she has a right to domineer over every perfon perfon in the Caftle—I declare I have forgot what I came for. (Sufan hangs the gown on a great arm chair that stands in the room, and keeps the cap and riband of the Countefs in her hand.)

A C O M E D Y.

Enter HANNIBAL the Page, running.

Sufan. So, Youth ! What do you do here? Page. Good morrow, Sufan—I have been watching these two hours to find you alone. Sufan. Well, what have you to fay, now you have found me?

Page. (Childishly amorous) How does your beauteous Lady do, Susan?

Sufan. Very well.

Page. (Poutingly) Do you know, Sulan, my Lord is going to fend me back to my Pappa and Mamma?

Sufan. Poor Child!

Page. Child indeed !-- Umph !-- And if my charming God-mother, your dear Lady, cannot obtain my pardon, I shall soon be deprived of the pleasure of your company, Susan.

Sufan. Upon my word !---He is toying all day long with Agnes, and is, moreover, in love with my Lady, and then comes to tell me he shall be deprived of my company. (Afide.)

Page. Agnes is good natured enough to liften to me, and that is more than you are, Sufan, for all I love you fo.

Sufan. Love me!—Why you amorous little villain, you are in love with every Woman you meet.

Page. So I am, Sufan, and I can't help it—If no-body is by, I fwear it to the trees, the waters, and the winds, nay, to myfelf—Yefterday I happened to meet Marcelina—

Sufan. Marcelina! Ha! ha! ha! ha! ha! ha! Page. Why, fhe is a Woman, Sufan. Sufan. Ha! ha! ha! ha! ha!

Page. And what's more, unmarried? Oh how fweet are the words Woman, Maiden, and Love, in my ear!

Sufan. Ha! ha! ha!—He's bewitch'd !—And what is the Count going to fend you from the Caftle for ?

Page. Last night, you must know, he caught me in the chamber with Agnes; begone, faid he, thou little—Sufan. Little what?

Page. Lord, he called me fuch a name, I can't for shame repeat it before a woman.

Sujan. And what were you doing in the chamber of Agnes?

Page. Teaching her her part.

Susan. Her part?

Page. Yes, the love scene, you know, she is to play in the Comedy this evening.

Susan. Which my Lord would chuse to teach her himself. (aside.)

Page. Agnes is very kind, Sufan.

Sufan. Well, well, I'll tell the Countels what you fay-But you are a little more circumspect in her prefence.

Page. Ah Susan, she is a Divinity ! How noble is her manner ! Her very smiles are awful !

Susan. That is to say, you can take what liberties you please with such people as me.

Page. Oh how do I envy thy happinefs, Sufan ! Always near her ! Drefing her every morning ! Undreffing her every evening ! Putting her to bed! Touching her ! Looking at her ! Speaking to— What is it thou haft got there, Sufan ? Sufan, (Counterfeiting the amorous air, and animated mated tone of the Page.) It is the fortunate riband of the happy cap, which at night enfolds the auburn ringlets of the beauteous Countefs.

$\mathbf{A} \quad \mathbf{C} \quad \mathbf{O} \quad \mathbf{M} \quad \mathbf{E} \quad \mathbf{D} \quad \mathbf{Y}. \qquad \mathbf{13}$

Page. Give it me-Nay, give it me-I will have it.

Susan. But I fay you shan't (the Page snatches it, and runs round the great chair, dodging Susan) Oh my riband!

Page. Be as angry as thou wilt, but thou shalt never have it again, thou should shave one of my eyes rather.

Susan. I can venture to predict, young gentleman, that three or four years hence, thou wilt be one of the most deceitful veriest Knaves-

Page. If thou dost not hold thy tongue, Susan, I'll kifs thee into the bargain.

Sufan. Kifs me !-Do not come near me, if thou lov'lt thy ears—I fay, beg my Lord to forgive you, indeed! No I affure you—" I fhall fay to him, " you do very right, my Lord, to fend this little " Rafcal packing, who is not only in love with " my Lady, but wants to kifs other folks into the " bargain."

Page. "How can I help it, Susan"? Here, take this paper.

Susan. For what?

Page. It contains a Song I have written on thy beauteous Lady, my charming God-mother.

Count. (without) Jaquez.

Page. Ah! I'm undone !—'Tis my Lord! (The Page crouches down, and hides himself behind Susan's petticoats and the great chair.)

Enter Count ALMAVIVA:

(Page remains hid behind the great chair.)

Count. So, charming Sufan, have I found theé at last? But thou seemest frightened my little Beauty.

Sufan. Confider, my Lord, if any body should come and catch you here—

Count. That would be rather mal-a-propos; but there's no great danger.

(The Count offers to kiss Susan.) Susan. Fie, my Lord! (The Count seats himself in the great chair, and endeavours to pull Susan on his knee, who resists.) Count. Thou knowest, my charming Susan, the King has done me the honour to appoint me Ambassador to the court of Paris. I shall take Figaro with me, and give him a very-excellent post; and as it is the duty of a Wife to follow her Husband, we shall then have every opportunity we could wifh. Susan. I really don't understand you, my Lord. I thought your affection for my Lady, whom you took so much pains to steal from her old Guardian; Dr. Bartholo, and for love of whom you generoufly abolished a certain vile privilege.-Count. For which all the young girls are very forry; are they not? Susan. No indeed, my Lord-I thought, my Lord, I fay-Count. Prithee fay no more; my sweet Sulan; but promise thou wilt meet me this evening, at twilight, by the Pavilion in the garden; and be certain, that if thou wilt but grant me this small favour, nothing thou canft afk shall-Bafil.

A C O M E D Y 15

Bafil. (without.) He is not in his own room. Count. Heavens! Here's fomebody coming! Where can I hide! Is there no place here? (The Count runs to get behind the great chair, Sufan keeps between him and the Page, who steals away as the Count advances, leaps into the great chair, with his legs doubled under him, and is covered over with the Countefs's gown, by Sufan.)

Enter BASIL.

Bafil. Ah, Sufan, Good morrow—Is my lord the Count here? Sufan. Here! What should he be here for? Bafil. Nay, there would be no miracle in it if he were: would there, hey gentle Sufan?

(Smiles and leers at her.) Susan. It would be a greater miracle to see you honest.

Basil. Figaro is in search of him.

Sujan. Then he is in fearch of the man who wishes most to injure him-yourself excepted.

Basil. It is strange, that a man should injure the Husband by obliging the Wife.

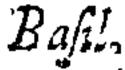

(The Count peeps from behind the great chair.) Count. I shall hear, now, how well he pleads my cause.

Basil. For my part, Marriage being, of all serious things, the greatest Farce, I imagined-

Susan. All manner of wickedness.

Basil. That though you are obliged to fast today, you might be glad to feed to-morrow, grace being first duly said. Susan. Be gone, and do not shock my ears with your vile principles.

Bafil. Yes, my pretty Sufan, but you must not suppose I am the dupe of these fine appearances. I know it isn't Figaro who is the great obstacle to my Lord's happines, but a certain beardless Page, whom Isurprised here, this morning, looking for you as I entered.

Sufan. I wish you would be gone, you wicked-

Basil. Wicked Devil! Ah, one is a wicked Devil for not shutting one's eyes.

Susan. I wish vou would be gone, I tell you.

Bafil. Was it not for you that he wrote the Song, which he goes chanting up and down the house, at every instant?

Susan. O yes! For me, to be sure!

Bassel. At least it was either for you, or your Lady.

Sulan. What next?

Bafil. Why really, when he fits at table, he does caft certain very fignificant glances towards a beauteous Countefs, who shall be namelefs—But let him beware! If my Lord catches him at his tricks, he'll make him dance without mufic.

Sufan. Nobody, but fuch a wicked creature as you, could ever invent fuch fcandalous tales, to the ruin of a poor Youth, who has unhappily fallen into his Lord's difgrace.

Bafil. I invent! Why it is in every body's mouth.

(The Count discovers himself, and comes forward.) Count. How ! In every body's mouth! Basil. Zounds !

Count. Run, Bafil, let him have fifty piftoles and a horfe given him, and fent back to his friends inftantly. Bafil.

A C O M E D Y i7

Bafil. I'm very forry, my Lord, I happened to fpeak-

Susan, I'm quite suffocated. (Susan seems almost ready to faint, the Count supports her, and Basil assists.)

Count. Let us seat her in this great chair, Basil.

Sufan. (Frightened, and exclaims) No!—I won't fit down !—(After a pause)—This wicked fellow has ruined the poor boy.

Bafil. I affure you, my Lord, what I faid, was only meant to found Sufan.

Count. No matter, he shall depart! A little, wanton, impudent Rascal, that I meet at every turning—No longer ago than yesterday I surprised him with the Gardiner's daughter.

Bafil. Agnes?

Count. In her very bed chamber.

Susan. Where my Lord happened to have businels himself.

Count. Hem !—I was going there to feek your uncle Antonio, Sufan, my drunken Gardiner; I knock'd at the door, and waited fome time; at laft Agnes came, with confusion in her countenance—I entered, caft a look round, and perceiving a kind of long Cloak, or Curtain, or fome fuch thing, approach'd, and without feeming to take the leaft notice, drew it gently afide, thus— Hey !

Basil. Zounds! (The Count, during his speech, approaches the arm chair, and acting his description draws aside the gown that hides the Page. They all stand motionless with surprise, for some time.) Count. Why, this is a better trick than t'other ! C Basil.

Bassel. No !-I won't sit down !

(Nimicking Susan.) Count. (To Susan) And so it was to receive this pretty Youth, that you were fo defirous of being alone—And you, you little Villain, what you don't intend to mend your manners then? But forgetting all respect for your friend Figaro, and for the Countels your Godmother, likewise, you are endeavouring here to seduce her favourite woman? I, however (turning towards Basil) shall not suffer Figaro, a man-whom-I esteem-sincerely -to fall the Victim of fuch deceit-Did he enter with you, Bafil?

Bafil. No, my Lord.

1

Susan. There is neither Victim nor deceit in the cafe, my Lord. He was here when you entered.

Count. I hope that's false: his greatest Enemy could not wish him so much mischief.

Sulan. Knowing that you were angry with him, the poor Boy came running to me, begging me to solicit my Lady in his favour, in hopes she might engage you to forgive him; but was so terrified, as foon as he heard you coming, that he hid himfelf in the great Chair.

Count. A likely story-I fat down in it, as soon as 1 came in.

Page. Yes, my Lord, but I was then trembling behind it.

Count. That's false, again, for I hid myself behind it, when Bafil entered.

Page. (Timidly) Pardon me, my Lord, but as you approach'd, I retired, and crouched down as you now fee me. Count. (Angrily) It's a little Serpent that glides 11110 into every crevice—And he has been listening too to our difcourse !

A COMEDY. 19

Page. Indeed, my Lord, I did all I could not to hear a word.

Count. (To Susan) There is no Figaro, no Husband for you, however.

Basil. Somebody is coming; get down.

Enter the COUNTESS, FIGARO, AGNES, and VASSALS, in their holiday cloaths. Figaro carrying the nuptial cap—The Count runs and plucks the Page from the great chair, just as they enter.

Count. What! Would you continue crouching there before the whole world?

(The Count and Countefs falutes Figaro. We are come, my Lord, to beg a favour, which we hope, for your Lady's fake, you will grant. (Afide to Sufan) Be fure to fecond what I fay.

Sufan. It will end in nothing. (Afide. Figaro. No matter : let us try, at least. (Afide. Countefs. You see, my Lord, I am supposed to have a much greater degree of influence over you than I really posses.

Count. Oh no, my Lady; not an atom, I affure you.

Figaro. (Prefenting the cap to the Count) Our petition is, that the Bride may have the honor of receiving from our worthy Lord's hand, this Nuptial-Cap; ornamented with half-blown roles, and white ribbands, Symbols of the purity of his intentions. Count. Do they mean to laugh at me? (Afide. C 2 Figaro.

Figaro. "And as you have been kindly pleafed
"to abolifh that abominable right, which, as "Lord of the Manor, you might have claimed,
"permit us, your Vaffals, to celebrate your praife,
"in a ruftic Chorus I have prepared for this oc"cafion. The Virtues of fo good a mafter
"fhould not remain unfung. Count. "A Lover, a Poet, and a Mufician!—
"Thefe titles, Figaro, might perhaps merit our "indulgence, if"— Countefs. Let me beg, my Lord, you will not deny their request: in the name of that Love you once had for me.

Count. And have still, Madam. Figaro, Join with me, my friends. Omnes. My Lord.

Sufan. Why should your Lordship refuse Eulogiums which you merit so well?

Count. Oh the Traitress. (Aside) Well, well,-I consent.

Figaro. Look at her, my Lord; never could a more beauteous Bride better prove the greatness of the facrifice you have made.

Susan. Oh do not speak of my Beauty, but of his Lordship's Virtues.

Count. My Virtues !—Yes, yes,—I fee they underftand each other. (Afide) Who can tell me where is Marcelina ?

Agnes. I met her, my Lord, just now, in the close walk by the park wall, along with Doctor Bartholo. She seemed in a passion, and the Doctor tried to pacify her. I heard her mention my Cousin Figaro's name. Count. (Aside) No Cousin yet, my dear; and perhaps never may be.

A C O M E D Y. 21

Agnes. (Pointing to the Page) Have you forgiven what happened yesterday, my Lord?

Count. (Afraid lest the Countess should hear, and chucking Agnes under the chin) Hush!

Figaro. (To the Page) What's the matter, young Hanibal the brave? What makes you fo filent?

Susan. He is forrowful because my Lord is going to send him from the castle.

Omnes. Oh pray, my Lord! Countess. Let me beg you will forgive him. Count. He does not deserve to be forgiven. Countess. Consider, he is so young. Count. (Half aside) Not so young, perhaps, as you suppose. Page. My Lord certainly has not ceded away the right to pardon. Susan, And if he had, that would certainly be the first he would secretly endeavour to reclaim. (Looking significantly at the Count and Figaro, by turns.) Count. (Understanding her) No doubt: no doubt. Page. My conduct, my Lord, may have been indifcreet, but I can assure your Lordship, that never the leaft word shall pass my lips-----Count. (Interrupting him) Enough, enough-Since every body begs for him, I must grant-I shall moreover give him a Company in my Regiment.

Omnes. Thanks noble Count.

Count. But on condition that he depart immediately for Catalonia to join the Corps. Omnes. Oh my Lord? Figaro. To morrow my Lord. Count. To day ! It shall be fo. (To the Page) Take leave of your Godmother, and beg her protection.

tion. (The Page kneels to the Counters with a forrowful air. As he approaches to kneel, he goes very flowly and Figaro gently pusces him forward.)

Fig. Go, go, Child; go.

Countefs. (With great emotion) Since—it is not poffible—to obtain leave—for you to remain here to day, depart, young man, and follow the noble career which lies before you—Forget not those with whom you have spent some of the first years of your life, and among whom you have friends who wish you every success—Go where Fortune and Glory call—Be obedient, polite, and brave, and be certain we shall take part in your Prosperity: (Raifes bim.

Count. You seem agitated Madam.

Countefs. How can I help it, recollecting the perils to which his youth must be exposed? He has been bred in the same house with me, is of the same kindred, and is likewise my Godson.

Count. (Afide) Batil I fee was in the right. (Turns to the Page) Go; kifs Sufan for the laft time. (The Page and Sufan approach, Figaro steps between them and intercepts the Page.)

Fig. Oh ! There's no occasion for kissing, my Lord: he'll return in the winter, and in the mean time he may kiss me — The scene must now be changed my delicate Youth: you must not run up stairs and down, into the Women's Chambers, play at Hunt-the-slipper, steal Cream, suck Oranges, and live upon Sweetmeats. Instead of that, Zounds! You must look bluff! Tan your face! Handle your musket! Turn to the right! Wheel to the left! And march to Glory. — At least if you are not flopt short by a Bullet.

Sufan

A C O M E D Y. 23.

Susan: Fie, Figaro. Countess. (Terrified.) What a Prophecy ! Fig. Were I a Soldier I would make fome of them scamper-But, come, come, my friends; let us prepare our feast against the evening. Marcelina I hear intends to difturb our Diversions. Count. That she will I can assure you. (Aside) I must go and fend for her. (going.) Countess. You will not leave us, my Lord? Count. I am undrest, you see. Countess. We shall see nobody but our own servants.

Count. I must do what you please. Wait for me in the study, Basil.

Exeunt Count, Countess, and Vass. Manent Figaro, Basil and Page.

Fig. (Retains the Page) Come, come; let us ftudy our parts well for the Play in the evening : and do not let us refemble those Actors who never play fo ill as on the first night of a Piece; when Criticism is most watchful to detect Errors, and when they ought to play the beft---- " We " shall not have an opportunity of playing better " to-morrow."

Basil. My part is more difficult than you imagine.

Figaro, And you may be rewarded for it, in a manner you little expect. [Afide.

Page. You forget, Figaro, that I am going. Figaro. And you with to ftay?

(In the same sorrowful tone.) Page. (Sighs.) Ah yes,

Egaro. Follow my advice, and fo thou shalt. Page. How, how? Figaro. Make no murmuring, but clap on your boots, and seem to depart; gallop as far as the Farm,

Farm, return to the Castle on foot, enter by the back way, and hide yourself till I can come to you.

Page. And who fhall teach Agnes her part, then?

Figaro. Oh oh !

Bafil. Why, what the devil have you been about, young Gentleman, for these eight days past, during which you have hardly ever left her? Take care, Hannibal, take care, or your Scholar will give her Tutor a bad character.—Ah Hannibal! Hannibal! The Pitcher that goes often to the Well—

Figaro. Listen to the Pedant and his Proverb. -Well, and what fays the wisdom of Nations--The pitcher that goes often to the well-

Bafil. Stands a chance, sometime, to return full.

Figaro. Not fo foolifh as I thought.

End of ACT I.

ACT

A COMEDY. 25

A C T II.

SCENE, the COUNTESS's Bed-Chamber.

(A state-bed in the back ground under an Alcove: three doors; one the entrance into the room, another into Susan's room, and the third to the Countess's dressing-room: a large window that opens to the street.)

The COUNTESS feated, SUSAN waiting.

Countefs. SHUT the door-And fo the Page was hid behind the great chair? Sufan. Yes, Madam.

Countess. But how did he happen to be in your room, Susan?

Sufan. The poor Boy came to beg I would prevail on you to obtain his pardon of my Lord the Count.

Countefs. But why did not he come to me himfelf? I should not have refused him a favor of that kind.

Susan. Bashfulnes, Madam. Ab Susan! said he, she is a Divinity! How noble is her Manner! Her; very smiles are avoful.

Countefs. (Smiling) Is that true, Sufan? Sufan. Can you doubt it, Madam? Countefs. I have always afforded him my protection. Sufan. Had you, Madam, but feen him fnatch the ribband from me ! Countefs. (Rifing) Pshaw! Enough of this nonfense fense-And so my Lord the Count endeavours to feduce you, Susan?

Sufan, Oh, no indeed, Madam, he does not give himfelf the trouble to feduce; he endeavours to purchase me: and because I refuse him will certainly prevent my marriage with Figaro, and support the pretensions of Marcelina.

Countefs. Fear nothing — We shall have need, however, of a little artifice perhaps; in the execution of which Figaro's affistance may not be amils.

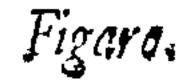

Sujan. He will be here, Madam, as soon as my Lord is gone a coursing.

Countess. YourLord is an ungrateful man, Susan! -An ungrateful man! (The Countess walks up and down the room with some emotion) Open the window; I am stifled for want of air-Vows, protestations and tenderness are all forgotten-My Love offends, my Careffes disgust-He thinks his own Infidelities must all be overlook'd, yet my Conduct must be irreproachable. Susan (At the window looking into the street). Yonder goes my Lord with all his Grooms and Greyhounds, Countess. To divert himfelf with hunting a poor timid harmless Hare to death-This, however, will give us time-Somebody knocks, Sulan. Susan. "For Figaro's the lad, is the lad for me." (Goes finging to the Door.)

Enter FIGARO.

(He killes Sulan's hand, she makes signs to him to be more prudent, and points to the Countess.)

Countefs. Well, Figaro, you have heard of my Lord the Count's defigns on your young Bride.

A COMEDY. 27

Figaro. Oh yes, my Lady. There was nothing very furprifing in the news. My Lord fees a fweet, young, lovely—Angel! (Sufan curt fies) and wifnes to have her for himfelf. Can any thing be more natural? I with the very fame—

Countefs. I don't find it fo very pleafant, Figaro. Figaro. He endeavours to overturn the schemes of those who oppose his wishes; and in this he only follows the example of the rest of the world. I endeavour to do the very same.

Susan. But with less probability of success, Figaro.

Figaro. Follow my advice, and I'll convince you of your miftake.

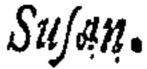

Countess. Let me hear.

Figaro. You, my lovely Sufan, muft appoint the Count to meet him, as he propoled, this evening, by the Pavillion in the Garden.
Countefs. How! Figaro! Can you confent?
Figaro. And why not, Madam?
Sufan. But if you can, fir, do you think I—Figaro. Nay, my Charmer, do not imagine I would wish there to grant him any thing thou wisheft to refuse—But first we must drefs up the Page in your cloaths, my dear Sufan; he is to be your Representative.

Countefs. The Page! Sufan. He is gone. Figaro. Is he?—Perhaps fo, But a whiftle from me will bring him back. (The Countefs feems pleafed.) Sufan. So! Now Figaro's happy!—Plots and Contrivances-

Figaro. Two! Three! Four at a time! Embarrass'd! Involv'd! Perplex'd!—Leave me to unravel them. I was born to thrive in Courts.

Sufan. I have heard the Trade of a Courtier is not so difficult as some pretend.

Figaro. Afk for every thing that falls, feize every thing in your power, and accept every thing that's offered—There is the whole art and mystery in three words.

Countefs. Well, but the Count, Figaro?

Figaro. Permit me, Madam, to manage him-And first, the better to secure my property, I shall begin by making him dread the loss of his own.-" Oh, what pleafure shall I have in cutting out " Employment for him during the whole day !--" To see him waste that time in jealously-watch-" ing your conduct, Madam, which he meant to " employ in amorous dalliance with my fweet "Bride-To behold him running here and there " and he does not know where, and hunting a mon-" ftrous Shadow, which he dreads to find, yet longs " to grafp." Countess. Surely, Figaro, you are out of your WITS: Figero. Pardon, my dear Lady, but it is your good Lord who will foon be out of his wits. Countefs. But as you know him to be fo jealous, how will you dare?---Fizaro. Oh, Madam! Were he not jealous, my scheme would not be worth a doit: but it will now ferve a double purpose-The Jewel which Posseffion has made him neglect, will again become valuable, if once he can be brought to dread its lofs.

Countefs. To confefs the truth, Figaro, your project exactly corresponds with the one I meant to practife—An anonymous Letter must be fent, informing him, that a Gallant, meaning to profit by his neglect—

Figaros

$A \quad C \quad O \quad M \quad E \quad D \quad Y. \qquad 29$

Figaro. And absence—is at present with his beauteous Countess—The thing is already done, Madam.

Countefs. How!—Have you dared to trifle thus with a Woman of Honor?

Figaro. Oh, Madam, it is only with a Woman of Honor I fhould prefume to take a liberty like this; leaft my Joke fhould happen to prove a Reality. Counte(s (Smiles). You don't want an agreeable excuse, Figaro.

Figaro. The hour of performing the mariage ceremony will arrive poste haste-he will be difconcerted, and having no good excuse ready, will never venture in your presence, Madam, to oppose our union. Susan. But if he will not, Marcelina will; and thou wilt be condemned to pay-Figaro. Poh! Thou haft forgot the Count is our Judge!—And, after being entrapp'd at the rendezvous, will he condemn us, thinkeft thou?-But come, come, we must be quick-I'll fend the Page hither to be dress'd-We must not lose a moment. (Exit Figaro. Countess (Examining her head dress in a pocket looking-glass). What a hideous cap this is, Susan; its quite awry-This Youth who is coming-Susan. Ah, Madam! Your Beauty needs not the addition of Art in his eyes. Countess. And my hair too-I affure you, Susan, I shall be very fevere with him. Susan (Smoothing the Countess's hair). Let me ipread this Curl a little, Madam-Oh, pray Madam, make him fing the fong he has written. (Susan throws the song into the Counters's lap, which the Page had given her.) Countess. I shall cell him of all the complaints I hear against him.

Sujan. Oh yes, Madam; I can see you will foold him, heartily. Countefs (Seriously). What do you say, Susan?

Susan (Goes to the door). Come; come in Mr. Soldier.

Enter PAGE.

(Susan pretends to threaten him by signs.)

Page. Um-(Pouts aside.) Countess. Well, young gentleman, (With assured severity)-How innocent he looks, Sufan! (Afde to Szlan). Susan. And how bashful, Madam! Countess (Resuming her serious air). Have you reflected on the duties of your new Profession? (The Page imagines the Countess is angry, and timidly draws back.) Susan (Aside to the Page). Ay, ay, young Rake, I'll tell all I know.--(Returns to the Countess). Obferve his downcast eyes, Madam, and long eyelashes.—(Aside to the Page) Yes, Hypocrite, I'll tell. Countess (Seeing the Page more and more fearful). Nay, Hannibal-don't-be terrified-I-Come nearer. Susan (Pushing him tozvards the Countess). Advance, Modesty. Countess. Poor Youth, he is quite affected-I am not angry with you; I was only going to fpeak to you on the duties of a Soldier-Why do you feem fo forrowful?

Page. Alas, Madam, I may well be forrowful! Being, as I am, obliged to leave a Lady fo gentle and fo kind—

$\mathbf{A} \quad \mathbf{C} \quad \mathbf{O} \quad \mathbf{M} \quad \mathbf{E} \quad \mathbf{D} \quad \mathbf{Y}. \qquad \mathbf{31}$

Susan. And so beautiful-(In the same tone and kalf aside.)

Page. Ah, yes! (Sighs).

Sufan (Mimicking). Ah, yes!—Come, come, let me try on one of my Gowns upon you—Come here—Let us meafure—I declare the little Villain is not fo tall as I am.

Page. Um—(Pouts.)
Sufan. Turn about—Let me untie your cloak. (Sufan takes off the Page's cloak.)
Countefs. But fuppole fomebody fhould come?
Sufan. Dear, my Lady, we are not doing any harm—I'll lock the door, however, for fear—
(The Page cafts a glance or two at the Countefs, Sufan returns) Well ! Have you nothing to fay to my beauteous Lady, and your charming God mother?
Page (Sigbs). Oh, yes ! That I am fure I fhalf love her as long as I live !

Countess. Esteem, you mean, Hannibal.

Page. Ye-yes-El-teem! I should have faid.

Susan (Laughs). Yes, yes, Esteem! The poor Youth overflows with Est-teem and Aff-ection-and-

Page. Um! (zifide to Sufen).

Susan. Nia, nia, nia, (Mocking the Page).-Dear, Madam, do make him fing those good-for-nothing Verses.

Countefs. (Takes the verfes Susan gave ber, from ker pocket) Pray who wrote them?

Sufan (Pointing to the Page). Look, Madam, look! His fins rife in his face—Nobody but an Author could look fo filly— Countefs. Come, Hannibal, fing, Sufan. Ah, the bashful Scribbler!

SONG,

S O N G.

To the Winds, to the Waves, to the Woods I complain; Ah, well-a-day! My poor heart! They hear not my Sighs, and they heed not my Pain ; Ah, well-a-day ! My poor heart !

" The name of my Goddels I 'grave on each Tree; " Ah, well-a-day ! My poor heart! "'Tis I wound the bark, but Love's arrows wound

" Ah, well-a-day! My poor heart!

- " The Heav'ns I view with their azure bright fkies; " Ah, well-a-day ! My poor heart !
- " But Heaven to me are her still brighter eyes : " Ah, well-a-day ! My poor heart !"

To the Sun's morning fplendor the poor Indian bows; Ah, well-a-day! My poor heart! But I dare not worfhip where I pay my Vows : Ah, well-a-day! My poor heart!

" His God each morn rifes and he can adore;

" Ah, well-a-day! My poor heart!

" But my Goddels to me must soon never rise more: " Ah, well-a-day ! My poor heart !"

(During the song the Countess is evidently affected by the Passion with which the Page fings. Susan. Now let us try whether one of my Caps-

Countesso

Countess. There is one of mine lies on my dreffing-table. (Exit Susan to the dressing room of the Countess.)-Is your Commission made out? Page. Oh yes, Madam, and given me. Here (Prefents his commission to the Countess.) it is. Countess. Already? They have made haste I see! They are not willing to luse a moment-Their hurry has made them even forget to affix the Seal.

Sufan. (Returns) The Seal ! To what, Madam? Countess. His Commission.

Sufan. So foon !

Countess. I was observing, there has been no time lost, (Returns the Page his Commission; he sticks it in his girdle.) Susan. Come-(Makes the Page kneel down, and puts him on the cap) What a pretty little Villain it is ! I declare I am jealous: see if he is not handsomer than I am ! Turn about—There—What's here ?— The riband !--- So, fo, fo! Now all is out ! I'm glad of it—I told my young Gentleman I would let you know his thievish tricks, Madam, Countess. Fetch me some black patches Susan. (Exit Susan to her own chamber. The Countess and the Page remain mute for a considerable time during which the Page looks at the Countes with great passion, though with the bashful side glances natural to his character-The Counters pretends not to observe him, and visibly makes feveral efforts to overcome her own feelings.) Countess. And—and—fo—you—you are forry to leave us?

Page. Ye-yes-Madam. Countess. (Observing the Page's heart so full that he is ready to burst into tears) 'Tis that good fornothing nothing Figaro who has frightened the child with his prognoffics.

Page. (Unable to contain himself any longer) N-oo-o indee-ee-eed, Madam, I-I-am o-on-only-griieved to part from-so dear a-La-a-ady.

Countefs. (Takes out her handkerchief and wipes bis eyes) Nay, but don't weep, don't weep— Come, come, be comforted. (A knocking is heard at the Counteffes chamber door) Who's there? (In an authoritative tone.)

The Count speaks without.

Count. Open the door, my Lady.

Countefs. Heavens! It is the Count !-- I am ruined !-- If he finds the Page here after receiving Figaro's anonymous Letter I shall be for ever lost !---What imprudence !

Count. (Without) Why don't you open the door?

Countefs. Because---I'm alone.

Count. Alone! Who are you talking to then ! Counte/s. To you, to be fure—How could I be fo thoughtlefs—This villainous Figaro.

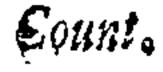

Page. After the scene of the great chair this morning he will certainly murder me if he finds me here.

Countess Run into my dreffing-room and lock the door on the infide. (I be Countess opens the door to the Count.)

Enter the COUNT.

Count. You did not use to lock yourself in, when you were alone, Madam! Who were you ipeaking to? Countefs. (Endeavouring to conceal her agitation) To—To Sufan, who is rumaging in her own room.

Count. But you seem agitated, Madam. Countess. That is not impossible (affecting to take a serious air) We were speaking of you.

Count. Of me!

Countess. Your jealousy, your indifference, my Lord.

Count. " I cannot fay for indifference, my Lady, . " and as for jealoufy, you know best whether I " have any caufe. Countefs. " My Lord !

Count. "In short, my Lady, there are people in

- " the world, who are malicious enough to wish to
- " disturb either your repose or mine. I have re-
- ceived private advice that a certain Thing called

" a Lover-Countess. " Lover! Count. " Ay, or Gallant, or any other title you " like best, meant to take advantage of my ab-" fence, and introduce himfelf into the Castle. Countess. " If there even were any one auda-" cious enough to make fuch an attempt, he " would find himfelf difappointed of meeting me; " for I shall not stir out of my room to day. Count. " What, not to the Wedding? Countess. I am indisposed. Count. " Its lucky then that the Doctor is here." (The Page oversets a table in the Countess's dre [fing-room.] Conntess. (Terrisied.) What will become of me? (Afide.) Count. What noise is that?

Countess. I heard no noise. Count. No? You must be most confoundedly absent, then. Countess. (Affecting to return his irony) Oh, to be sure.

D 2

Count. But there is fomebody in your dreffingroom, Madam.

Countefs. Who should there be?

Count. That's what I want to know.

Countefs. It is Sulan, I suppose, putting the chairs and tables to rights.

Co.mt. What! Your favourite woman turned house-maid! You told me just now she was in her own room.

Countefs. In her room, or my room, it is all one. Count. Really, my Lady, this Sufan of yours is a very nimble, convenient kind of perfon. Countefs. Really, my Lord, this Sufan of mine difturbs your quiet very much.

Court. Very true, my Lady, fo much that I am determined to fee her.

Countess. These suspicions are very much to your credit, my Lord.

Count. If they are not to your difcredit, my Lady, it is very eafy to remove them—But I fee you mean to trifle with me (be goes to the Countefs's dreffing-room door, and calls) Sufan ! Sufan ! If Sufan you are, come forth !

Countefs. Very well, my Lord! Very well! Would you have the girl come out half undreffed? She is trying on one of my left off dreffes—To difturb female privacy, in this manner, my Lord, is certainly very unprecedented. (During the warmth of this dispute, Susan comes from her own room, perceives what is passing, and after listening long enough to know how to act, slips, unseen by both, behind the curtains of the bed which stands in the Alcove.)

Count. Well, if she can't come out, she can answer at least. (Calls) Susan!-Answer me, Susan.

Countefs. I fay, do not answer, Sufan ! I forbid you to speak a word !---We shall see who she'll obey.

Count. But if you are so innocent, Madam, what is the reason of that emotion and perplexity so very evident in your countenance?

Countess. (Affecting to laugh) Emotion and perplexity! Ha! ha! ha! Ridiculous!

Count. Well, Madam, be it as ridiculous as it may, I am determined to be fatisfied, and I think prefent appearances give me a fufficient plea. (Goes to the fide of the Scenes and calls) Hollo! Who waits there?

Countefs. Do, do, my Lord! Expose your jealousy to your very servants! Make yourself and me the jest of the whole world.

Count. Why do you oblige me to it?—However, Madam, fince you will not fuffer that door to be opened, will you pleafe to accompany me while I procure an inftrument to force it?

Countess. To be sure, my Lord ! To be sure ! If you please.

Count. And, in order that you may be fully juftified, I will make this other door fast (Goes to Sulan's chamber door, locks it, and takes the key.) As to the Sulan of the dreffing-room, she must have the complaifance to wait my return.

Countefs. This behaviour is greatly to your honor, my Lord ! (This speech is heard as they are going through the door, which the Count locks after him.) (Exeunt.)

Enter SUSAN, peeping as they go off, then runs to the dressing-room door and calls.

Susan. Hannibal!—Hannibal!—Open the door! Quick! Quick!—Its I, Susan. D 3 Enter Enter PAGE, frightened.

Page. Oh Sufan! Sufan. Oh my poor Mistrefs ! Page. What will become of her? Susan. What will become of my marriage? Page. What will become of me? Susan. Don't stand babbling here, but fly. Page. The doors are all faft, how can I fly? Susan. Don't ask me! Fly! Page. Here's a window open (runs to the window) Underneath is a bed of flowers; I'll leap out.

Susan. (Screams) You'll break your neck ! Page. Better that than ruin my dear Lady-Give me one kifs Sufan.

Sufan. Was there ever feen fuch a young— (Pege killes her, runs and leeps out of the window, and Susan shrieks at sceing him) Ah! (Susan sinks into a chair, overcome with fear-At last she takes courage, rifes, goes with dread toreards the window, and after looking out, turns round with her hand upon her heart, a sigh of relief, and a smile expressive of sudden ease and pleasure.) He is fafe! Yonder he runs !- As light and as fwift as the winds!-If that Boy does not make fome woman's heart ache I'm miltaken. (Susan goes towards the dreffing-room door, enters, and peeps out as she is going to shut it.) And now, my good jealous Count, perhaps, I may teach you to break open doors another time. (Locks herself in.)

Enter COUNT, with a wrenching iron in one hand, and leading in the COUNTESS with the other. Goes and examines the doors.

Count. Every thing is as I left it. We now shall come to an eclairessement.

Countess. But, my Lord !--He'll murder him ! (Aside.)

Count. Now we shall know—Do you still persist in forcing me to break open this door ?—I and determined to see who's within.

Countefs. Let me beg, my Lord, you'll have a moment's patience !-Hear me only and you fhall fatisfy your utmost curiofity !-Let me intreat you to be affured, that, however appearances may condemn me, no injury was intended to your honour. Count. Then there is a man?

Countefs. No-none of whom you can reasonably entertain the least suspicion.

Count. How?

Countefs. A jeft !—A meer innocent, harmlefs frolic, for our evening's diversion ! Nothing more, upon my Honor !—On my foul !

Count. But who-who is it?

Countess. A Child !

Count. Let us see your child !--- What child? Countess. Hannibal.

Count. The Page! (Turns away) This damnable Page again? — Thus then is the Letter ! — thus are my Suspicions realized at last !—I am now no longer aftonished, Madam, at your emotion for your pretty Godson this morning !—The whole is unravelled !—Come forth, Viper !

(In great wrath.) Countefs. (Terrified and trembling) Do not let the Diforder in which you will fee him — Count. The Diforder !—The Diforder ! Countefs. We were going to drefs him in women's cloaths for our evening's diversion—

Count. I'll ftab him !—I'll !—" And this is your " indifposition !—This is why you would keep D 4 " your

"your Chamber all day ! False, unworthy Woman! "You shall keep it longer than you expected."— I'll make him a terrible example of an injured Husband's wrath !

Countefs. (Falling on her knees between the Count and the door) Hold, my Lord, hold ! Or let your anger light on me !—I, alone, am guilty ! If there be any guilt—Have pity on his youth ! His infancy'!

Count. What! Intercede for him !---On your knees!--And to me! There wanted but this !--I'll rack him !--Rife !--I'll (Furioufly.) Countefs. Promise me to spare his life ! Count. Rife! (The Countefs rifes terrified, and sinks into an arm chair ready to faint.) Countess He'll murder him!

Count. Come forth, I fay, once more; or I'll drag-(While the Count is Speaking, Susan unlocks the door and bolts out upon bim.)

Susan. I'll stab him !--- I'll rack him !--

(The Countess, at bearing Susan's voice, recovers sufficiently to look round—Is astonished, endeavours to collect herself, and turns back into her former position to conceal her surprise.)

Countefs. (After standing fixed some time, and first looking at Susan and then at the Countess) Here's a seminary !---And can you act altonishment too, Madam? (Observing the Countess, who cannot totally hide her surprise.)

Countess. (Attempting to speak) I-My Lord-Count. (Recollecting bimself.) But, perhaps, she was not alone. (Enters the dressing-room,

Countess again alarmed, Susan runs to the Countess. Susan

Susan. Fear nothing—He is not there—He has jumped out of the window.

Countefs. And broke his neck! (Her terror returns.)

Susan. Hush! (Susan claps berself bolt upright against her Lady, to hide her new disorder from the Count.) Hem! Hem!

Re-enter COUNT, (greatly abashed)

Count. Nobody there !--I have been to blame -(approaching the Countefs.) Madam !--(With great fubmifion as if going to beg her pardon, but the confusion still visible in her countenance calls up the recellestion of all that had just passed, and he bursts out into an exclamation.) Upon my foul, Madam, you are a most excellent Actrefs ! Susan. And am not I too, my Lord ? Count. You see my Confusion, Madam-be generous.

Susan. As you have been.

Count. Hush !--- (Makes signs to Susan to take his part.) My dear Rosina-----

Countefs. No, no, my Lord ! I am no longer that Rofina whom you formerly loved with fuch affection !— I am now nothing but the poor Countefs of Almaviva ! A neglected Wife, and not a beloved Miftrefs.

Ccunt. Nay, do not make my humiliation too fevere—(His suspicions again in part revive) But wherefore, my Lady, have you been thus mysterious on this occasion? Countefs. That I might not betray that headlong thoughtless Figaro.

Count.

Count. What! He wrote the anonymous billet then?

Countess. It was without my knowledge, my Lord.

Count. But you were afterwards informed of it?

Countess. Certainly.

Count. Who did he give it to?

- Countess? Basil-

Count. Who fent it me by a Peasant-Indeed, Mr. Basil.-Yes, vile Thrummer, thou shalt pay for ali!

Countess But where is the justice of refusing that pardon to others we ftand fo much in need of ourselves? If ever I could be brought to forgive, it should only be on condition of passing a general amnesty. Count. I acknowledge my guilt. (The Countess fands in the middle of the flage, the Count a little in the back ground, as if expressive of bis timidity, but his countenance shews he is confident of obtaining bis pardon-Susan stands forwarder than either, and her looks are significantly applicable to the circumstances of both parties.) Sufan. To suspect a man in my Lady's dreffing-100m!—-Count. And to be thus feverely punished for my fulpicion !---Safan. Not to believe my Lady when the assured you it was her Woman! Count. Ah! --- (with offested confusion) Deign, Middam, once more, to repeat my pardon. Countefs. Have I already pronounced it, Sufan? Sufan. Not that I heard, Madam. Count. Let the gentle fentence then escape.

Countess.

Countefs. And do you merit it, ungrateful man? (with tendernefs.) Count. (Looking at Susan, who returns his look)

Certainly, my Lady. Countess. A fine example I set you, Susan ! (The Count takes her hand and kiffes it.) Who, hereafter, will dread a Woman's anger? (Countefs turns her head towards Susan, and laughs as she (ays this.) Susan. (In the same tone) Yes, yes, Madam-I observe—Men may well accuse us of frailty. Count. And yet I cannot, for the foul of me, forget the agony, Rofina, in which you feemed to be just now! Your cries, your tears, your-How was it possible, this being a Fiction, you should fo fuddenly give it the tragic tone of a Reality ?-Ha! ha! ha!-So aftonishingly natural ! Countess. You see your Page, and I dare fay your Lordship was not forry for the mistake-I'm sure the fight of Sulan does not give you offence. Count. Hem!-Offence! Oh! No, no, no-But what's the reason, you malicicious little huffey, you did not come when I called? Sufan. What! Undrefs'd, my Lord? Count. But why didn't you answer then? Sufan, My Lady forbad me : and good reafon the had fo to do. Count. Such diffraction in your countenance! (To the Countefs) Nay, it's not calm even yet ! Countefs. Oh you -you fancy fo my Lord. Count. Men, I perceive, are poor Politicians -

Women make Children of us—Were his Majefly wife, he would name you, and not me, for his Ambaffador.

Enter FIGARO, chearfully: perceives the Count, who puts on a very serious air.

Fig. They told me my Lady was indifposed, I ran to enquire, and am very happy to find there was nothing in it.

Count. You are very attentive.

Fig. It is my duty fo to be, my Lord. (Turns to Sulan.) Come, come, my Charmer ! Prepare for the Ceremony ! Go to your Bridemaids.

Count. But who is to guard the Countels in the mean time?

Figaro. (Surprisea) Guard her, my Lord! My Lady feems very well : fhe wants no guarding. Count. From the Gallant, who was to profit by my absence? (Susan and the Counters make signs to Figaro.) Countefs. Nay, nay, Figaro, the Count knows a Susan. Yes, yes, we have told my Lord every thing.—The jeft is ended—Its all over.

Figaro. The jeft is ended!—And its all over! Count. Yes-Ended, ended, ended !-----And all over-What have you to fay to that?

Fig. Say, my Lord! (The confusion of Figaro arifes from not supposing it possible the Countess and Susan should have betrayed him, and when he understands something by their signs, from not knowing how much they have told.) Count. Ay, fay.

Fig. I-I-I wish I could fay as much of my Marriage. Count. And who wrote the pretty Letter? Figaro. Not I, my Lord.

Count. If I did not know thou lieft, I could read it in thy face.

Figaro. Indeed, my Lord!—Then it is my face that lies; and not I.

Countefs. Pshaw, Figaro! Why should you endeavour to conceal any thing, when I tell you we have confess'd all?

Sulan. (Making figns to Figaro) We have told my Lord of the Letter, which made him fulpect that Hannibal, the Page, who is far enough off by this, was hid in my Lady's dreffing-room, where I myfelf was lock'd in.

Figaro. Well, well, fince my Lord will have it fo, and my Lady will have it fo, and you all will have it fo, why then fo let it be.

Count. Still at his Wiles.----

Countefs. Why, my Lord, would you oblige him to speak truth, so much against his inclination? (Count and Countefs walk familiarly up the stage.) Susan. Hast thou seen the Page?

Fig. Yes, yes: you have shook his young joints for him, among you.

Enter ANTONIO, the Gardiner, with a broken Flower-pot under his arm half drunk.

Antonio. My Lord-My good Lord-If fo be as your Lordship will not have the goodness to have these Windows nailed up, I shall never have a Nosegay fit to give to my Lady-They break all my pots, and spoil my flowers; for they not only throw other Rubbish out of the windows, as they used to do, but they have just now tossed out a Man.

Count. A Man!—(The Count's suspicions all revive.) Antonio.

Antonio. In white flockings ! (Countefs and Sufan discover their fears, and make figns to Figaro to affift them if poffible.) Count. Where is the Man ? (Eagerly.) Antonio. That's what I want to know, my Lord! --I with I could find him,-I am your Lordfhip's Gardener; and, tho' I fay it, a better Gardener is not to be found in all Spain;-but if Chambermaids are permitted to tofs men out of the window to fave their own Reputation, what is to become of mine?--" It will wither with my flowers to " be fure.

Figaro. Oh fie! What fotting fo foon in a morning?

Antonio, Why, can one begin one's day's work too early?

Count. Your day's work, Sir?

Antonio. Your Lordship knows my Niece, there she stands, is to be married to day; and I am sure she would never forgive me if ----- Count. If you were not to get drunk an hour fooner than ufual—But on with your ftory, Sir—What of the Man ?—What followed ?

Antonio. I followed him myfelf, my Lord, as faft as I could; but, fomehow, I unluckily happened to make a falfe ftep, and came with fuch a confounded whirl against the Garden-gate—that I— I quite for—forgot my Errand.

Count. And should you know this man again? Antonio. To be fure I should, my Lord !--If I had seen him, that is Count. Either fpeak more clearly, Rafcal, or I'll fend you packing to— Antonio. Send me packing, my Lord?—Oh, no! If your Lordship has not enough—enough (Points to bis forehead) to know when you have a good Gardener, I warrant I know when I have a good Place.

2

Ĉ

Figaro. There is no occasion, my Lord, for all this mystery ! It was I who jump'd out of the window into the garden.

Count. You?

Figaro. My own self, my Lord.

Count. Jump out of a one pair of ftairs window and run the risk of breaking your Neck?

Figaro. The ground was foft, my Lord.

Antonio. And his Neck is in no danger of being broken.

Figaro. To befure I hurt my right leg, a little, in the fall; just here at the ancle—1 feel it still. (Rubbing his ancle.)

Count. But what reason had you to jump out of the window?

Figaro. You had received my letter, my Lord, fince I must own it, and was come, fomewhat fooner than I expected, in a dreadful passion, in fearch of a man.—

Antonio. If it was you, you have grown plaguy fast within this half hour, to my thinking. The man that I faw did not feem fo tall by the head and shoulders.

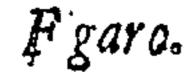

Figaro. Pshaw! Does not one double one's felf up when one takes a leap?

Antonio. It feem'd a great deal more like the Page.

Count. The Page !

Figaro. Oh yes, to be fure, the Page has gallop'd back from Seville, Horfe and all, to leap out of the window ! Antonio. No, no, my Lord ! I faw no fuch thing! I'll take my oath I faw no horfe leap out of the window.

Figaro. Come, come, let us prepare for our sports.

Antonio. Well, fince it was you, as I am an honeft man, I ought to return you this Paper which drop'd out of your pocket as you fell.

Count. (Snatches the paper. The Countefs, Figaro, and Susan are all surprised and embarrassed. Figaro shakes himself, and eadeavours to recover his fortitude.) Ay, fince 'it was you, you doubtles can tell what this Paper contains (claps the paper behind his back as he faces Figaro) and how it happened to come in your Pocket?

Figaro. Oh, my Lord, I have such quantities of Papers (searches his pockets, pulls out a great many) No, it is not this !- Hem !- This is a double Loveletter from Marcelina, in feven pages-Hem!--Hem! -It would do a man's heart good to read it-Hem!—And this is a petition from the poor Poacher in prison. I never presented it to your Lordship, because I know you have affairs much more serious on your hands, than the Complaints of fuch half-starved Rascals-Ah!-Hem!-this-thisno, this is an Inventory of your Lordship's Swordknots, Ruffs, Ruffles, and Rofes-must take care of this -- (Endeavours to gain time, and keeps glancing and hemming to Susan and the Countess, to look at the paper and give bim a bint.) Count. It is neither this, nor this, nor that, nor t'other, that you have in your hand, but what I hold here in mine, that I want to know the contents of. (Holds out the paper in action as he speaks, the Countess who stands next him catches a sight of it.) Countess. Tis the Commission. (Aside to Susan.) Susan. The Page's Commission. (Afide to Figaro.) Count. Well, Sir !- So you know nothing of the matter?

An tonio. (Reels round to Figaro) My Lord fays you-know nothing of the matter.

Figaro. Keep off, and don't come to whisper me. (pretending to recollect himself.) Oh Lord! Lord ! What a stupid fool I am !---I declare it is the Commission of that poor youth, Hannibal-which I, like a Blockhead, forgot to return him-He will be quite unhappy about it, poor Boy. Count. And how came you by it? Figaro. By it, my Lord? Count. Why did he give it you? Figaro. To-to-to-Count. To what? Figaro. To get-Count. To get what? It wants nothing! Countess. (to Susan) It wants the Seal. Susan. (to Figaro) It wants the Seal. Figaro. Oh, my Lord, what it wants to be fure is a mere trifle. Count. What trifle? Figaro. You know, my Lord, it's cuftomary to-Count. To what? Fgaro. To affix your Lordship's Seal. Count. (Looks at the Commission, finds the Seal is wanting, and exclaims with vexation and disappointment) The Devil and his Imps!-It is written, Count, thou shalt be a Dupe!-Where is this Marcelina? Going. Figaro. Are you going, my Lord, without giving Orders for our Wedding?

-7

Enter MARCELINA, BASIL, BOUNCE, and Vaffals.

(The Count returns.)

Marcelina. Forbear, my Lord, to give fuch Orders; in Justice forbear. I have a written promise E under his hand, and I appeal to you, to redrefs my injuries! You are my lawful Judge.

Figaro. Pshaw! A trifle, my Lord: a note of hand for money borrowed; nothing more.

Count Let the Advocates and Officers of Juffice be affembled in the great Hall; we will there determine on the juffice of your claim. It becomes us not to fuffer any Vaffal of ours, however we may privately efteem him, to be guilty of public injury.

Bafil. Your Lordship is acquainted with my claims on Marcelina: I hope your Lordship will grant me your support.

Count. Oh, oh! Are you there, Prince of Knaves? Antanio. Yes, that's his title, fure enough. Count. Approach, honeft Bafil; faithful Agent of our Will and Pleafure. (Bafil bows) Go order the Lawyers to affemble.

Bofil. My Lord !---

-

Count. And tell the Peafant, by whom you fent me the Letter this morning, I want to fpeak with him.

Befil. Your Lordship is pleased to joke with your humble Servant. I know no such Peasant.

Count. You will be pleased to find him, notwithstanding.

Bafd. My Office, in this Houfe, as your Lordthip knows, is not to go of Errands! Think, my Lord, how that would degrade a man of my talents; who have the honour to teach my Lady the Harpfichord, the Mandoline to her Woman, and to entertain your Lordship, and your Lordship's good Company, with my Voice and my Guitar, whenever your Lordship pleases to honor me with your Commands. Bauxce. I will go, if your Lordship pleases to let let me! I should be very glad to oblige your Lordship.

ACOMĖDY. ĝi

Count. What's thy Name?

Bounce. Pedro Bounce, my Lord, Fire-work maker to your Lordship.

Count. Thy zeal pleases me, thou shalt go.

Bounce. Thank your Lordship, thank your noble Lordship. (Leaps.)

Count. (To Bafil) And do you be pleafed, Sir, to entertain the Gentleman, on his Journey, with your Voice and your Guitar; he is part of my good Company.

Bounce. (Leaps) I am part of my Lord's good Company! Who would have thought it! Bafil. My Lord Count. Depart! Obey! Or, depart from my Service. (Exit.)

Bafil. 'Tis in vain to refift. Shall I wage war with a Lion, who am only-

Figaro. A Calf—" But come, you feem vex'd " about it—I will open the Ball—Strike up, tis " my Sufan's Wedding-day."

Basil. Come along, Mr. Bounce, (Basil begins to play, Figaro dances and sings off before him, and Bounce follows, dancing af er. (Exeunt.)

Manent COUNTESS and SUSAN.

Countess. You see, Susan, to what Danger I have been exposed by Figaro and his fine concerted Billet.

Sufan. " Dear Madam, if you had but feen
" yourfelf when I bounced out upon my Lord!
So pale, fuch Terror in your Countenance!
" And then your fuddenly affumed tranquillity! Countefs. " Oh no, every Faculty was loft in my " Fears. Sufan. " I affure your Ladyfhip to the contrary ; E 2 " in

" in a few Leffons you would learn to diffemble and fib with as good a Grace as any Lady in the Land."

Countess. And so that poor Child jumped out of the Window?

Susan. Without the least hesitation-as light and as chearful as a Linnet.

Countefs. I wish however I could convict my false Count of his Infidelity.

Susan. The Page will never dare, after this, to make a second attempt.

Countess. Ha!-Alucky project! I will meet him myfelf; and then nobody will be exposed. Susan. But suppose, Madam-Countess. My Success has emboldened me, and I am determined to try-(Sees the Riband left on the chair) What's here? My Riband! I will keep it as a Memento of the danger to which that poor Youth-"Ah my Lord-"Yet let me have a " care, let me look to myfelf, to my own Con-" duct, left I fhould give occasion to fay—Ah my " Lady !" (The Counters puts the Riband in her Pocket.) You must not mention a Word of this, Sufan, to any body. Susan. Except Figaro. Countess. No exceptions, he must not be told; he will fpoil it, by mixing fome plot of his own with it -I have promifed thee a Portion thou knowest-these men are liberal in their Pleafures-Perhaps I may double it for thee; it will be Susan's Right. Susan. Your Project is a charming one, Madam, and I shall vet have my Figaro

End of ACT II.

a -

COMEDY. 53

C T A III.

SCENE, the Great Hall.

(A Judge's Chair, four other Chairs, Benches with red Baize, a Table and a Stool, with Pen, Ink and Paper.)

Enter the COUNT, dressed, and a SERVANT, booted.

Count. RIDE to Seville with all fpeed; engiment, and at what o'clock precifely he arrived; give him this Commission, and return like lightening.

Servant. And if he is not there....

Count. Return still quicker.-Go; fly!----(Exit Servant)-I was wrong to fend Bafil out of the way-He might have been very ferviceable-But Anger was never wife-I fcarcely know at present what I wish-When once the Passions have obtained the Mastery, there is no Mind, however confiftent, but becomes as wild and incongruous as a Dream-If the Countefs, Sufan, and Figaro should understand each other and plot to betray me !--- If the Page was shut up in her dreffing-room-Oh! no!-The Refpect she bears herself-my Honor !- My Honor ? And in my Wife's keeping ?-Honor in a Woman's posselfion, like Ice Cream in the mouth, melts away in E 3 a contest 54 THE FOLLIES OF A DAY, a conteft of Pleafure and Pain—I will found Figaro, however.

Enter FIGARO, behind.

Figaro. Here am I. (Afide.) Count And if I have reason to suppose them plotting against me, he shall marry Marcelina. (Afide.) Figaro. Perhaps not. Count. But in that cafe, what must Susan be? Figaro. My Wife, if you please.-(Figaro's eagerness occasions him to speak aloud ——The Count turns reund aftonified.) Count. My Wife, if you please !- To whom did you say my Wife, if you please? Figure. To-to-to-That is-They were the last words of a sentence I was faying to one of the Servants-Go and tell fo and fo to-my Wife, if you pleafe. Count. Your Wife!-Zounds, you are very fond of your Wife.

Figaro. I love to be fingular.

Count. You have made me wait for you here a long while.

Figaro. I have been changing my Stockings, which I dirtied in the fall.

Count. Servants, I think, are longer dreffing than their Mafters.

Figaro. Well they may—They are obliged to drefs themselves.

Count. If in fifting my Gentleman, I find him unwilling to go to France, I may conclude Sufan has betrayed me. (Afide.) Figaro. He has mischief in his head, but I'll watch his motions. (Afide.) Count.

Count. (Approaches Figaro with familiarity)— Thou knowest, Figaro, it was my intention to have taken thee with me on my Embassy to Paris, but I believe thou dost not understand French.

Figaro. Perfectly.

Count. Indeed!—Let's hear.—(Figaro pull's out his purse and jingles it)—Is that all the French thou understandest?

Figaro. All!-Is not that enough, think you, my Lord?-That's a I anguage understood in every corner of the habitable Earth, and in no place better than in Paris.—" Your Philosophers, " who lament the loss of an universal Language, " are Fools-They always carry one in their " pockets. As for a knowledge of French, my Lord, I maintain, s'il vous plait, and a Purfe are all that's necessary—Let but the found of Silver jingle in a Frenchman's ears, and he will inftantly understand your meaning, be it what it will.---" If you have a Law-fuit, and with to gain your "Caufe, go to the Judge, pull off your Hat, " and pull out your Purse; smile, shake it, and " pronounce, s'il vous plait, Monsieur-Count. " And your Adverfary is overthrown. Fgaro. " Undoubtedly-Unlefs he understands " French still better than you-Do you wish the " Friendship of a great Lord, or a great Lady, " its ftill the fame-Chink, chink, and s'il vous " plait, Monseigneur-S'l vous plait, Madame-The " French are a very witty People !-- Amazingly " quick of apprehension!-Therefore, my Lord, " if you have no other reason than this for lea" ving me behind-" Count. But thou art no Politician.

E 4

Figaro.

Figaro. Pardon me, my Lord, I am as great a master of Politics——

Count. As thou art of French.

Figaro. Oh, my Lord, the thing is fo eafy-He must be a Fool indeed who could find his vanity flattered by his skill in Politics-To appear always deeply concerned for the good of the State, yet to have no other end but Self-interest; to affemble and fay Nothing; to pretend vaft Secrecy where there is nothing to conceal; to fhut yourfelf up in your Chamber, and mend your Pen or pick your Teeth, while your Footmen inform the attending Croud you are too buly to be approach'd-this, with the art of intercepting Letters, imitating Hands, pensioning Traitors, and rewarding Flatterers, is the whole mystery of Politics, or I am an Idiot. Count. This is the definition of a Partifan not a Politician.

Figuro. Party and Politics are much the fame, they are become fynonimous terms.

Cozzt. (Afide) Since he is fo willing to go to Paris, Sulan has faid nothing.

Figuro. 'Tis now my turn to attack. (Afide.) Count. And—I suppose thou wilt take thy Wife with thee—to Paris?

Figure. No-no-I fhould be obliged to quit her io frequently, that I am afraid the Cares of the marriage flate would lie too heavy on my head (fgnificantly.)

Count. Sulan has betrayed me. (Afide.) Figaro. (Afide) He does not like the retort. (The Count Indics, approaches Figaro with great familiarity, and leans upon his shoulder—By-play between the Count and Figaro.)

Count.

Count. The time was, Figaro, when thou wert more open—Formerly thou would ft tell me any thing.

Figaro. And at prefent I conceal nothing.

Count. What can be the Countefs's motives— (The Count puts his arm round Figaro's neck—By-play again)—I—Thou feeft I anticipate her wifnes, load her with prefents—

Figare. Will give her any thing but yourfelf— Of what worth are Trinkets when we are in want of Neceffaries ?

Count. Come, come; be fincere—Tell me— How much did the Countefs give thee for this last plot? Figaro. As much as your Lordship gave me for helping you to steal her from her old jealous Guardian—" A noble Lord should not endeavour "to degrade an honest Servant, less the should make "him a Knave."

Count. But wherefore is there continually fome Mystery in thy conduct?

Figaro. Because the Conduct of others is mysterious.

Count. Appearances, my dear Figaro, really speak thee a great Knave.

Figaro. (Looking round at the Count's hand upon his shoulders, and observing his familiarity)—Appearances, my dear Lord, are frequently false—I am much better than I appear to be—Can the Great in general fay as much?—(Aside)—Take that. Count. Yes, yes; she has told him. (Aside.) Figaro. "I shall content myself, my Lord,

" with the portion your Lordship has promised "me on my Marriage, and the place of Steward " of

- " of this Caftle, with which you have honoured "me, and willingly remain with my Wife here
- " in Andalusia, far from troubles and intrigue. Count. "But thou hast Abilities, and might rife
- " to Preferment.

Figaro. " Preferred by my Abilities my Lord! —Your Lordship is pleafed to laugh at me." Count. Yes, yes; Sufan has betrayed me, and my Gentleman marries Marcelina. (Afide.) Figaro. He has been angling for Gudgeons, and what has he caught? (Afide.)

Enter a SERVANT.

Servent. Don Guzman and the Counfellors are without.

Count. Let them wait.

Figaro. (Ironically) Aye, let them wait. (Exit Serv.) Count. And doit thou expect to gain thy Cause?

Figaro. With the affiftance of Justice and my Lord's good wishes, who respects Youth too much himself to force others to wed with Age.

Count. A Judge knows no diffinction of perfores.

Figarc. "Well—Time, fay the Italians, is a "valiant Fellow, and tells Truth"—But what was it your Lordship was pleased to send for me for ?

Count. For-(Somewhat embarrassed) To see these benches and chairs set in order.

Figaro. That is already done, my Lord. Here is the great chair for your Lordship, a seat for the Preficient, a table and stool for his Clerk, two benches for the Lawyers, the middle for the Beau monde, and the Mob in the back ground. (Exit.) Count.

A COMEDY. 59

Count. He is too cunning; I can get nothing out of him; but they certainly understand each other.—They may toy and be as loving as they please, but as for wedding—

Enter SUSAN. (She comes up to the Count's elbow while he is speaking, and is surprized to see him in such an ill humour.)

Susan. My Lord! Count. My Lady ! Susan. My Lady has fent me for your Lordship's fmelling-bottle; fhe has got the vapours. Count. Here; and when fhe has done with it, borrow it for yourfelf,-it may be uleful. Sufan. I the vapours, my Lord! Oh no, that's too polite a disease for a Servant to pretend to ! Count. Fits may come;—Love fo violent as your's cannot bear difappointment; and when Figaro marries Marcelina-Susan. Oh, suppose the worst, my Lord, we can pay Marcelina with the Portion your Lordship has promifed us ! Count. I promis'd you a portion? Susan. If my ears did not deceive me, I underftood as much. Count. Yes, if you had pleas'd to under stand me, but fince you do not.---Susan. (Preiending bashfulness) It's always soon enough to own one's weakness, my Lord. Count. (with an instant change of countenance) What! Wilt thou take a walk this evening in the garden, by the Pavilion ? Sufan. Don't I take Walks every evening, my Lord ? Count. Nay, nay, but let us understand each other—No Pavilion, no Marriage.

Sufan,

Su'an. And no Marriage, no Pavilion, my Lord! (cu tfying)

Count. What a witty little Devil! I wonder what the does to fascinate me fo !-But prithee tell me why haft thou always, till now, refused with fuch obstinacy? This very Morning, thou knoweft----

Susan. This Morning, my Lord!-What, and the Page behind the Great-chair!

Count. Oh, true! I had forgot!-But when Bafil has fpoken to thee in my behalf.---

Susan. Is it necessary, my Lord, such a knave as Bafil should know every thing that passes?

Count. She is right again !- But-(Suspicious) thou wilt go, now, and tell Figaro all. Susan. To be sure, my Lord. I always tell him all-except what is necessary to conceal. Count. Ah the Huffey! What a charming little Knave it is! Run, run to thy Mistres; she is waiting, and may fulpect us. Susan. (Hesitati g) So your Lordship can't perceive that I only wanted a pretext to fpeak to your Lordihip. (The Count unable to conceal bis transport, is going to kifs her, but hears somebody coming, and they ∫eparate) Count. (As he turns.) She absolutely bewitches me! I had fworn to think no more of her, but the winds me just as the pleases! (The Count goes off, and Figaro enters, but the Count hearing Figaro's Voice, returns and peeps) Figaro. Well, my Sufan, what does he fay? Susan. Hush! Hush! He is just gone-Thou hast gained thy Cause-Run, run, run. (Exit Susan, running, Figaro following.) Figaros

A C O M E D Y. 61 Figaro. Well, but how, how, my Charmer? (Exeunt.)

Re-enter COUNT.

Count. Thou haft gained thy Caufe—Aha! And is it fo, my pair of Knaves !—Am I your Dupe then ?—A very pretty Net ! But the Cuckoo is not caught—Come !—Proceed we to judgment ! (With paffion) Be we juft !—Cool !—Impartial !— Inflexible— (Exit.)

Enter Don GUZMAN, MARCELINA, and DOCTOR.

Marcelina. I shall be happy, Mr. President, to explain the justice of my Cause.

Doctor. To shew you on what grounds this Lady proceeds.

D. Guzman. (Stuttering) We-e-e-ell, le-et us exa-a-mine the matter ve-erbally.

Marcelina. No, Mr. Prefident, given to me. Guz I co-o-o-omprehend ! Gi-iven to you. Marcel na. And a fum of Money which I-----Guzman. I co-o-o-omprehend ! Which you-ou ha ave received.

Marcelna. No, Mr. Prefident, which I have lent.

Guzman. I co-o-o-omprehend !---It is re-e-paid.

Marc. lina. No, Mr. Prefident, it is not repaid. Guzman. I co-o-o-omprehend—The m-m-man would marry you to pay his de-de-de-bts. Marcelina. No, Mr. Prefident, he would neither marry me, nor pay his debts.

Guzman. D-d--do you think I d-d-d-don't co-oomprehend you?

Doctor. And are you, Mr. President, to judge this Cause?

Guzman. T-t-t-to be fure—Wha-at elfe did I purchase my Place for thi-ink you, (Loughs flupidly at the supposed felly of the Question) And where is the De-fe-e-endant?

' Enter FIGARO.

Figaro. Here, at your fervice. Dottor. Yes, that's the Knave. Figaro. Perhaps I interrupt you. Guzman. "Ha-ave not I fee-een you before, " young Man?

Figaro. "Oh yes, Mr. President, I once served " your Lady.

Guzman. "How lo-ong fince?

Figaro. " Nine months before the birth of her

" laft Child—And a fine Boy it is, though I fay it.

Guzman. "Y-es-He's the F-flower of the " Flock"—And the cau-aufe betwee-een— Figaro. A Bagatelle, Mr. Prefident! A Bagatelle.

Guzman. (Laughs.) A Ba-ag-a-telle! A pro-omife of Ma-a-arriage a Ba-a-gatelle! Ha! ha! ha! — And doft thou hope to ca-aft the Pla-aintiff? Figaro. To be fure, Mr. Prefident! You being one of the Judges.

Guzman. (With stupid dignity) Ye-e-es! I am one of the Judges!—Hast thou see-een D-D-Dou-blefee, my Se-ecretary? Figaro Yes, Mr. Prefident! That's a duty not to be neglected. Guaman, The young Fellow is not fo fi-i-imple I thought.

$\mathbf{A} \subset \mathbf{O} M \in \mathbf{D} \mathbf{Y}.$ 63

Enter Cryer of the Court, Guards, Count, Counfellors and Vassals.

Cryer. Make room there, for my Lord, the Count.

Count. Wherefore in your Robas, Don Guzman? It was unnecessary for a mere domessic matter like this.

Guzman. Pa-a-ardon me, my Lord! "Thofe " who would tre-e-emble at the Clerk of the " Court in his Robes, would la-augh at the Judge "without 'em." Forms! Forms! are facred things. (The Count and the Court feat them selves.)

Count. Call filence in the Court.

Cryer. Silence in the Court.

Guzman. Read " over the Causes", D-D-Doublefee.

Doublefee " The Count de los Altos Montes di " Agnas Freicas, Senor di Montes Fieros, y otros " Montes, Plaintiff, against Alonzo Calderon, " a Comic Poet. The question at present before " the Court, is, to know the Author of a Comedy "that has been damned; which they mutually " difavow and attribute to each other. Count. " They are both very right in mutu-" ally difavowing it; and be it decreed, that if, " hereafter, they should produce a successful " Piece, its Fame shall appertain to the Count, and " its Merit to the Poet-The next. Doublefee. " Diego Macho, Day-labourer, Plain-" tiff, against Gil-Perez-Borcado Tax-gatherer,

- " and receiver of the Gabels, for having violently " dispossessente de faid Diego Macho, Day-labourer,
- " of his Cow.
 - Count. " This Caufe does not come within my Jurif-ϵ_4 THE FOLLIES OF A DAY,

" Jurifdiction; but as it is probable the Day. " labourer will never obtain Justice, do thou see,

"Figaro, that another Cow be fent him, left his Family fhould be ftarved—The next."

Doublefee. Marcelina-Jane-Maria - Angelica-Muftacio, Spinster, Plaintiff, against—(To Figaro) Here's no furname!

Figaro. Anonymous.

Guaman. Ano-o-onymous—I never heard the Name before!

Doublefee. Against Figaro Anonymous. What Profession?

Figaro. Gentleman. Count. Gentleman!

Figaro. I might have been born a Prince, if Heaven had pleased. Deublefee. Against Figaro Anonymous, Gentleman, Defendant. The Question before the Court relates to a promise of Marriage; the Parties have retained no Council, contrary to the ancient and established practice of Courts. Figaro. What occasion for Council? A race of Gentleman who are always fo very learned, they know every thing, except their Briefs! Who infolently interrogate Modefty and Timidity, and endeavour, by confusing, to make Honesty forfwear itself; and, after having laboured for hours, with all legal prolixity, to perplex felf-evident Propositions, and bewilder the understandings of the Judges, fit down as proud as if they had just pronounced a Phillipic of Demosthenes-(Addressing himself to the Court) My Lord, and Gentlemen-The Question before the Court is-Doublefee. (Interrupting him) It is not you to fpeak, you are the Defendant—Who pleads for the Plaintiff.

Doctor. I. Doublefee. You! A Phyfician turn Lawyer?----Figaro. Oh yes, and equally skilful in both. Count. Read the Promise of Marriage, Doctor. Guaman. Re-e-ead the Pro-o-omile of Marriage.

Doctor. (Reads) I acknowledge to have received of Marcelina-Jane-Maria-Angelica-Mustachio, the sum of two thousand Plasters, in the Castle of Count Almaviva, which fum I promife to repay to the faid Marcelma-Jane-Maria-Angelica-Muftachio, and to marry her. Signed, Figaro. (Addressing himself to the Count) My Lord, and Gentlemen! Hiem! Never did cause more interesting, more intricate, or in which the Interest of Mankind, their Rights, Properties, Lives and Liberties were more materially involved, ever claim the profound Attention of this most learned, most honourable Court, and from the time of Alexander the Great, who promised to espouse the beauteous Thalestris-Count. Stop, most formidable Orator; and ere you proceed, enquire whether the Defendant does not contest the validity of your Deed. Guzman. (To Figaro) Do you co-ontest the vava-va-va-lidity of the Dee-eed? Figaro. My Lord and Gentlemen! Hem! There is in this Cale, either Fraud, Error, Malice, or mifchievous Intention, for the Words of the Acknowledgment are, I promise to repay the said Marcelina-Jane-Maria-Angelica - Mustachio, the faid sum of two thousand Piasters or to marry her, which is very different.

Doctor. I affirm it is AND. Figaro. I affirm it is OR. Doctor. Well, suppose it. F ·· .

Figaro.

Figaro. No Supposition, I will have it granted.

Count. Clerk, Read you the Promife.

Guzman. Re-e-ead the P-P-P-Promise, D-D-D-Double-fee.

Doublefee. (Reads) I acknowledge to have received of Marcelina-Jane-Maria-Angelica-Muftachio, the fum of two thousand Piasters, in the Castle of Count Almaviva, which fum I promise to repay the said Marcelina-Jane-Maria-Angelica-Mustachio, and-or-and-or-or-The Word is blotted.

Doctor. No matter; the fense of the Phrase is equally clear. This learned Court is not now to be informed the word or particle, Or, hath various fignifications—It means otherwise and either—It likewise means before—For example, in the language of the Poet. Or 'ere the Sun decline the western Sky, 'Tis Fate's decree the Victims all must die. Figure. This was the language of Prophesy, and spoken of the Doctor's own Patients.

Count. " Silence in the Court.

Crier. " Silence in the Court.

Doctor. "Hence then, I clearly deduce (granting the word to be Or) the Defendant doth hereby promife, not only to pay the Plaintiff, but marry her before he pays her—Again, the the word Or doth fometimes fignify Wherefore, as another great and learned Poet hath it,

" Or how could heav'nly Juffice damn us " all,

" Who ne'er confented to our Father's "Fall?

56 That is wherefore? For what reason could heaven-

A C O M É D Υ . 67

^{cc} heavenly Juffice do fuch an unjuft thing ? Let ^{cc} us then fubfitute the adverb Wherefore, and the ^{cc} intent and meaning of the Promife will be in^{cc} conteftable; for, after reciting an acknowledge^{cc} ment of the debt, it concludes with the remark^{cc} able words, Or to marry her, that is, wherefore;
^{cc} for which reafon, out of gratitude, for the Fa^{cc} vour above done me, I will marry her.
^{cc} Figaro. ^{cc} Oh moft celebrated Doctor ? Moft ^{cc} poetic Quibbler !

- "Hark with what florid Impotence he "speaks,
- ⁴⁴ And as his Malice prompts, the Puppet ⁴⁵ fqueaks,
 ⁴⁴ Or at the ear of Eve, familiar Toad,
 ⁴⁴ Half froth, half venom, fpits himfelf ⁴⁵ abroad
 ⁴⁴ In legal Puns, or Quibbles, Quirks, or ⁴⁵ Lies, ⁴⁴ Or Spite, or Taunts, or Rhymes, or Blaf-⁴⁵ phemies.
- " What think you we know not Quotations, and
- " Woets, and Ands, and Ors, and Whys, and Wherefores.
 - "What Drop or Nostrum, can such Plagues "remove,
 - " Or which must end me, a Fool's Wrath ---" Or Love?

(Pointing first to the Doctor, and then to Marcelina.) ⁵⁴ We have neither forgot our Reading nor our ⁵⁴ Syntax, but can easily translate a dull Knave into ⁵⁴ a palpable Fool—" My Lord, and Gentlemen, ⁵⁴ You hear his Sophisms, Poetical, and Conundrums, Grammatical. F 2 Count.

Count. Yes, yes, we hear

(Count and the Counfellors rife and confult together.) Antonio, I'm glad they have put an end to your prating.

Marcelina. Their Whifperings and wife Grimaces forebode me no good. That Sufan has corrupted the chief Judge, and he is corrupting all the others.

Doctor. It looks devilish like it.

(The Count and Counfellors resume their seats.) Doublesee. Silence in the Court.

Crier. Silence in the Court.

Count. The judgment of the Court is, that fince the validity of the promise of Marriage is not well established, Figaro is permitted to dispose of his Perfon. Figaro. The Day's my own. Mercelina. I thought how it would be. Count. But as the Acknowledgement clearly expresses the words, Which jum I promise to pay the said Marcelina - Jane - Maria - Angelica - Mustachio, or to marry ber, the faid Figaro stands condemned to pay the two thousand Piasters to the Plaintiff, or marry her in the course of the Day. Figaro. I'm undone! Marcelina. I am happy ! Count. And I am revenged ! Antonio. Thank your noble Lordship! Most humbly thank your noble Lordship!-Ah ha ! I'm glad thou art not to marry my Niece! I'll go and tell her the good news! (Exit.)

Crier. Clear the Court. (Exeunt Guards, Counsellors, and Vessels.

Manent Don Guzman, Figaro, Marcelina and Dr. Bartholo.

Figaro. 'Tis this Furze-ball, this Fungus of a Prefident that has loft me my Caufe.

Guzman. I a F-F-Furze-ball and a F-F-Fungus! Figaro. (Sits down dejected) I will never marry her.

Guzman. Thou mu-uft ma-arry her.

Figaro.What! Without the Confent of my noble Parents ?

Count. (Returning) Where are they? Who are they ?---He will still complain of injustice---Name them. Figaro. Allow me time, my Lord-I must first know where to find them, and yet it ought not to be long, for I have been seeking them these five Years. Doctor. What ! A Foundling ? Figero. No Foundling, but stolen from my Parents.

Count. Poh! This is too palpable.

(Exit Count)

Figaro. Had I no other Proof of my Birth than the precious Stones, Ring, and Jewels found upon me, these would be sufficient-but I bear the (He is going to shew his Arm.) Mark Marcelina. Of a Lobster on your left Arm. Figuro. How do you know that? Marcelina. 'Tis he himfelf!

Figaro. "Yes, its me myfelf," Marcelina. 'Tis Fernando! Doctor. Thou wert stolen away by Gypsies. Figaro. By Gyplies !-- Oh Doctor, if thou can'ft but restore me to my illustrious Parents, "Moun-" tains F3

- stains of Gold will not fufficiently fpeak their 🦸 gratitude."
 - Doctor. Behold thy Mother.
 - (Pointing to Marcelina.) Figaro. Nurse, you mean !
 - Doctor. Thy own Mother !

Marcelina. And there behold thy Father.

(Pointing to the Doctor.) Figaro. He, my Father ! Oh Lord ! Oh Lord ! Oh Lord! (Stamps about.)

Guzman. (With great wisdom) It will be no m-mmatch-ihat's evi-dent.

Marcelina. Hast thou not felt Nature pleading within thee, at fight of me?

Figaro. Never.

Marcelina. This was the fecret caufe of all my - Fondnefs for thee.

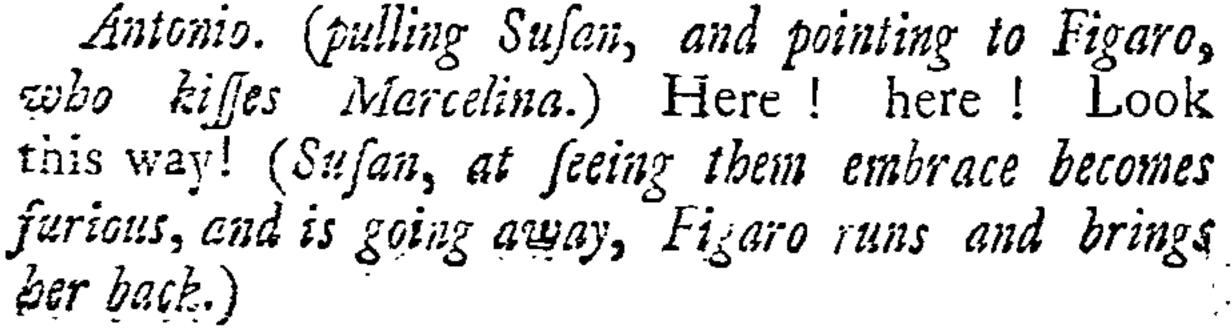

Figaro. No doubt-And of my aversion-Inftinct is very powerful.

Marcelina. Come to my arms, my dear, my long soft Child. (Figa o and Marcelina embrace, the Doctor leans against the Benches.)

Enter ANTONIO and SUSAN.

(The latter runs to find the Count)

Susan. (In great Agitation) Oh, where is my Lord? Here is the Money to pay Marcelina with ! The Portion which my noble and generous Lady has given me !

Figaro.

Figaro. Stop, ftop, my Sufan.
Sufan. I have feen enough—Since you are fo fond of her, pray marry her.
Figaro. Thou art miftaken.
Sufan. No, I am not miftaken.
(Gives bim a flap in the face.)
Figaro. (Rubbing bis Cheek) " This is Love—
" Pfhaw! Prithee come hither, look at that La" dy—How doft thou like her ?
Sufan. " Not at all.
Figaro. " Well faid Jealoufy, fhe does not " mince the Matter."
Marcelina. Dear Sufan, this, this is my Son!
Figaro. " Yes, they wanted me to marry my " Mother."

Antonio. "Your Mother!---It is not long "fince----

Figaro. " I have known it-True"

Marcelina. Yes, my dearest Susan, embrace thy Mother—Thy Mother, who will love thee dearly. Susan. And do you consent I shall have my Figaro?

Marcelina. Willingly, (Susan runs and kisses ber) Here, my Son, here is the Promise.

(Gives him the Paper.) Susan. And here is the Portion.

(Gives him a Purse of Money.) Figaro. "My manly Pride would fain make me "reitrain my tears, but they flew in spite of me— "Well, let 'em ! Let 'em flow ! Joys like these "never come twice in one's Life ! Oh, my Mo"ther, Oh, my Sufan !" (They all three embrace, weeping.) Guzman. (weeping.) What a Foo-oo-ool am [! L-L-Look, if I don't k-k-k-cry as well as the beft of 'em. Figaro. (to the Doctor) My Father. F 4. Dolle

Doctor. Keep off! I disclaim thee!

Antonio. Why then, if you are his Father, you are a Turkish Jew, and no Christian Father.

Doctor. A Knave that tricked me of my Ward, cheated me of my Money, and now has been turning my Wifdom into ridicule.

Susan. And are not you, being a wise Man, proud to have a Son wiser than yourself?

Doctor. No-I would have no one wifer than myfelf.

Antonio. Come, come, look you, I am " a good "Catholic, and" an old Caftilian, therefore, unlefs your Father and Mother become lawful Man and Wife, I will never consent to give you my Niece. No, no, she sha'n't marry a man who is the child of Nobody, neither. Guzman. Here's an old Fool !- The Child of Nobody, Ha! ha! ha! (Laughs stupidly, and then assumes great Wisdom) Hav'n't you lived long enough to know that every Child must have a Father? Marcelina. " Confider, good Doctor, your Pro-" mise, if ever our Child was found. Dottor. " Pfhaw ! Marcelina. " And here is a Son you furely need f not be ashamed of. Susan. " Ah my dear Pappa! Figaro. " My generous, worthy Father. (Susan frokes bis Cheek, Figaro kneels, and Marcelina coaxes bim.)

Stfan. "You don't know how we will all love "you.

Marcelina. "What care we will take of you, Figaro. "How happy we will make you. Doctor. "Good Dector, dear Pappa, generous Father! (Burfts out a crying) See, if I am not even a greater Foo-oo-ool than Mr. Prefident! (Guzman ftaggers back at the Doctor's Compliment) they mould me like Dough, lead me like a Child, (Marcelina, Sufan, and Figaro teftify their Joy by their Actions.) Nay, nay, but I hav'n't yet faid yes.

🧉 a greater

Sufan. "But you have thought yes.
Marcelina. "And look'd yes.
Figaro. "Come, come, we must be quick; let us run and find the Count, otherwife he will invent fome new pretext to break off the Match.
(Exeunt Doctor, Marcelina, Figaro and Sufan.)

Manent Don GUZMAN.

Guzman. " A greater Foo-oo-ool than Mr. " Prefident !— The People in this House are truly " very stupid and ill bred." (Exit.)

End of ACT III.

. .

A C T IV.

SCENE, a large Saloon.

FIGARO and SUSAN, both joyous.

Figaro. SHE has converted her Doctor at last —They are to be married, and these fo late implacable Enemies are now become our dearest Friends.

Sufan. What unexpected Happinefs! Figaro. Chance, my Sufan—All the effect of Chance—" Yefterday, without a Relation in the " World I could claim, to-day, behold me re-" ftored to my Parents—True it is, they are " neither fo rich nor fo right honorable, fo be-" laced nor betitled as my imagination had " painted them—But that's all one, they are " mine"—I may truly be called both a Chance Child, and a Child of Chance—By Chance was I begot, by Chance brought into the World, by Chance was I ftole, by Chance am I found, by Chance have I lived, and by Chance I fhall die —Chance is Nature's Sovereign, and muft be mine.

Sufan. Yes, and by Chance thou mayst come to be hang'd. (Laughs.) Figaro. Or thou to be an Empress-Neither of them are impossible-He, the Conqueror, whose Ambition ravages the Earth, and whose Pride eats up Nations, is not less the sport of Chance than

A COMEDY. 75 than the blind Beggar who is conducted by his dog.

Susan. Ha, ha, ha!-Prithee leave thy Philofophy, and-Figaro. And think of that other blind beggar, Love—Most willingly, my Angel. (Kisse ber.) Susan. Pooh, Pooh!—That was not what I meant.

Figaro. Rather fay it was not half thy meaning, or thy meaning ill expressed. (Kisse ber again.) Susan. Ah, Figaro ! Were this fondness, these days but durable-

Figaro, Durable !-- Iron and Adamant--- No; may millions of imaginary Gallants wrack my heart and decorate my---

Susan. " No rhodomantade, Figaro-Tell me " the fimple truth.

Figaro. "By the truest of all Truths I swear-Susan. "Truest of Truths!-Are there various " kinds of Truths then?

Figaro. " No doubt.

Susan. " Fie!

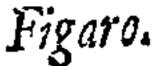

Figaro. "There are Truths that may be fpoken: " fuch as the Peccadillos of a poor Rafcal! " Truths that may not be fpoken: fuch as the " Robberies of a rich Rafcal—There are your " Truths comprehenfible: fuch as that two and two " make four; and your Truths incomprehenfible: " fuch as that two and two make five—Then " there are your Tradefman's Truths, which he " retails to his Cuftomers, your Lover's Truths, " which he pours wholefale into his Miftrefs's " ear—Your Courtier's Truths, on which he feeds " his Dependants and Parafites—Your Court of " Law, or Kifs-the-Book Truths, which are the daily fupport of a vaft number of very honeft " people

" ple—There are alfo your phyfical and meta-" phyfical Truths—Your old Truths and your new " Truths—Your heterodox and orthodox Truths "—Your Mahometan Truths, your Jewifh Truths, " and your—other kind of truths, concerning " which there never was nor ever will be any " doubt—Not to mention your Truths in fafhion: " fuch as that Idlenefs, Ignorance, Diffipation, " Gaming and Seduction are the requifites of a " Gentleman—And your Truths out of fafhion: " fuch as that Gentlenefs, Obedience, Œconomy, " and connubial Love are the requifites of a Genteroman.

Susan. " I find by your account of the matter,

" Figaro, that poor Truth, like a Lottery Ticket, " is so divided and sub-divided, so halved, quar-" tered, cut, carv'd, split and spliced, it is no " where entire to be found. Figaro, " No where. Susan. " And moreover, that what is Truth to-" day may be a Lie to-morrow. Figaro. " May be! Must be. Susan. " Consequently, that in less than twen-" ty-four hours, my very tender fubmiffive, ardent " Lover may be metamorphofed into an arbitrary, " cold, haughty Husband. Figaro. " Impossible !--- Impossible, my Sulan ! " As it is for thee, my gentle, kind, and beau-" teous Bride, to be transformed into an ill-tem-" pered, extravagant flatternly Wife. Susan. " I understand thee"-Well, Well-We will endeavour to convert the iron Bands of Matrimony into a flowery Wreath which Love fhall teach us to bear lightly and joyoufly through Life.

Figaro. Aye, and thus live a happy Exception to the established usage of a mad World.

Susan. But prithee, who is to go disguised and meet the Count?

Figaro. Who ?-Nobody-Let him wait and fret, and bite his Nails-I never meant thou shoulds go.

Susan. I affure thee I never had any inclination. Figaro. "Is that the real Truth, Susan?" Susan. "What! Thinkest thou I am as learned

" as thou art? And that I keep several sorts of "Truths?"

Figaro. (With fond Vivacity). And doft thou love me?

Sufan. (Tenderly). Too much, I doubt. Figaro. Ah !--That's but little. Sufan. How ! Figaro. In Love's Creed, too much is not even enough. Sufan. I understand nothing of this over-refinement, but I feel I shall love my Husband most heartily. Figaro. Keep thy word, and put our modern Wives to the blush. Sufan. Afford them a subject to laugh and point at, thou mean'st.

Enter the COUNTESS.

Countess. Wherever you meet One of them, be certain you shall find a Pair. (They salute the Countess)—The Bridesmen and Maids wait for you, Figaro.

Figaro. I will take my excuse in my hand-

(Going to lead out Susan)—Few offenders can plead to charming a one. Countess. No, no; ftop Susan: I want you— She

She ihail come presently. (Exit Figaro) .- Well, Sulan, the time approaches, we must prepare for the Rendezvous.

Szlaz. " I must not go, Madam, Figaro is un-" willing.

Countess. (Angry). "Figaro !-Figaro is not so " scrupulous when a Marriage-portion is in quef-" tion-That's a poor Pretence; you are forry " you have told the truth, and discovered the " Intentions of the Count.-Go, go-I am not to " be fo deceived. (Going). Sujan. (Catching hold of her and kneeling). " Ah,

"Madam! Let me conjure you to hear me, to " pardon me.--How can you think me capa-" ble of deceiving so good, so liberal a Lady, " whole bounties I have so often felt !---- Oh, " no; it is becaule I have promifed Figaro. Countels. (Mildly and Smiling). " Rife-Haft " thou forgot, filly Girl, that it is I who am " to go and not thee. - (Killes her forehead, -But "--- I was too hafty. Susan. " My dear, my generous Mistres." Countess. And what is the place of Rendezvous? Sussen. The Pavilion in the Garden. Countess. There are two. Susan. But they are opposite. Countess True-At what hour? Sufan. I don't know. Countess. That must be fixed-Sit down, take the pen and write-(Sufan fits down, the Countefs dictates) A NEW SONG,

To the Tune of, The Twilight past, the Bell had toll'd. Sufan. (Writes). New fong-Tune of-Bell had toll'd-What next, Madam?

Countess.

0

Countefs. Dost think he will not understand thee?

Susan. (Looking archly at the Countes). Very true—(Folding up the Letter)—But here is neither Wax nor Wafer.

Countess. Fasten it with a Pin, and write on the direction, Return the Seal. (Smiling.)

Susan, (Laughs) The Seal !---(Gets up.)-This is not quite so serious as the Commission just now was.

Countess. (Sighs). Ah, Susan. Susan. I have never a Pin. Countess. Take this. (Gives her one which fastened the Page's riband to her break; it falls.) Susan. (Picking up the riband) This is the Page's riband, Madam. Countess. Wouldst thou have me let him wear it? It will do for Agnes; I will give it her the first Bouquet she presents me. (Just as the Countess has said this, Agnes and a troop of young Maidens, among them the Page, in girl's cloaths, enter with nosegays f.r the Countess, who infiantly pu's the riband in her pocket, with an evident wish, by her looks and action, to preserve it.) Countefs. (Looking at the Page) What pretty maiden is this? Agnes. A Cousin of mine, Madam, that we have invited to the Wedding. Countess. Well, then, as we can wear but one nofegay, let us do honour to the Stranger (Takes the Nosegay from the Page, and killes his forehead.-Aside to Susan) Don't you think, Susan, she refembles amazingly---(Stops short, and looks at Susan). Susan. Amazingly, indeed, Madam!

.Page.

So THE FOLLIES OF A DAY. Page. (Afide) What a precious kifs! I feel it here. (Putting bis band on bis beart.)

Enter the Count, and Antonio with a hat in his hand,

. Antonio. (As he enters) Yes, yes, my Lord, I'm certain it was him. The rakish little Rascal is difguifed among the Girls. I found his new hat and cockade here-hid in a basket. (The Countess and Susan surprised, look at the Page, and then at each other. The girls surround and endeevour to hide Hannibal; Antonio seeks among them). Ay, ay, here he is-here he is. (Antonio takes off his cap, and puts on bis bat) There, my Lord! There's a pretty, modest Virgin for you ! Count. Well, my Lady ! Countess. Well, my Lord !- I am as much furprized as you can be; and, I affure you, not less vex'd.-At present, however, it is time to tell you the whole Truth. This young gentleman (Pointing to the Page) was hid in my Dreffing-room.-We attempted a Joke, which these Girls have put in practice. Count. But wherefore hide him from me? Countefs. Becaufe, my Lord, when your Paffions are predominant, you are incapable of either liftening to or believing the Truth. Count. (Aside) Must I for ever be disturbed, haunted, and bewitch'd thus by this beardles Boy? (Turning with great wrath towards the Page) What is the reason, Sir, you have not obeyed my Commands?

Page. (Draws back frightened, and takes off his hat) My-my-my Lord, I itaid to teach Agnes the Love scene she is to play in the Comedy this evening.

Agnes. (Steps forward) Ah, my Lord, when you come to my room, you know, and want to kifs me—

Count. I! (The Countess remarks his embarrassment, Su'an laughs filei.tly, and makes signs to the Countess).

Agnes. Yes, my Lord ! You fay to me, My pretty Agnes, if you will but love me, I will give you any thing you with to have; now, my Lord, if you will give me Hannibal for a hufband, I will love you with all my heart.

Countess. You hear, my Lord!-Has not the fimplicity of this Child's confession, as artless as the one I have this moment made, sufficiently justified my Conduct? And do not circumstances prove, how injurious your Suspicions have been, and how well founded mine? (Count bows to the Countes.) Antonio. You fee, my Lord, what a giddy young thing it is. Count. And very loving too. Antonio. Her mother, as every body knows, was just such another.

Enter FIGARO.

Figaro. Come, my pretty Maidens, come. (Turns to the Count) While you keep the Lasses here, my Lord, we can neither begin our Procession nor our Dances.

Count. (Gravely putting on his hat) Why furely, Sir, you don't intend to dance.

Figaro. Why not, my Lord? Count. What! With a hurt in your ancle? Figaro. Oh! Is that all?-It pains me a little, to be sure; but that's a trifle-Come Gills. Ġ Count.

Count. (Turning bim back) You were very lucky to light upon fuch foft ground.

Figaro. Exceedingly, my Lord :- Come Laffes, Anionio. (Turning him back on the other fide) And then you double yourfelf up, when you take a leap? Yet, like a Cat, you fall on your feet.

Figaro. What then 2-Come Gir-

Count., But how unhappy the poor Youth will be about his Commission.

Figaro. What is the meaning of all this, my Lord ?

Antonio. (Bringing the Page forward) Do you know this bashful young Lady?

Figaro. The Devil! Hannibal !-- (Afide.) Well, and what Riddle has he to propound?

Count. No Riddle, Sir, but a simple matter of fact :-- He affirms, it was he who jump'd out of the window.

Figaro. Does he?-Well, if he fay fo, I fuppole it is fo.

Count. How ! What two at a time ?

Figaro. Two? Twenty! Why not, my Lord? One theep begins, and the reft naturally follow: (Flour'sh of Music without) Come, come, my merry Maidens, don't you hear the music? Quick, quick, run, run, run.

(Execut Susan and Figaro, with the Girls)

Count. (To the Page) Harkee, little Rascal, begone, instantly; put off your Petticoats, and don't itir out of your room the rest of the day.-Take care, Sir, I don't meet you again.

Page. (Putting on bis hat) No matter-I bare away that upon my forehead, which would compenfate for an age of imprisonment (Exit joyously). Count. (Looks at the Countess, reho recollects the kis she had just given the Fage) His forehead! What jS A COMEDY. 83. is it he bears away fo triumphantly upon his forehead?

Countefs. (Embarrassed) A—His Officer's hat, I fuppose. Every new Bauble pleases a Child. (Going.) Count. The Procession is coming, will not your Ladyship stay and be a witness of your Favourite's happiness?

Countess. As your Lordship pleases.

(Enter the Procession of the two Weddings. A March is played; Doctor Bartholo and Marcelina are preceded by Cryer of the Court, Guards, Double-fee, Counfellors, Don Guzman; after them come Antonio, Figaro, and Susan, followed by the Bridesmen and Maids, and a troop of Dancers. They all salute the Count and Countes as they pass; and after making the tour of the flage, Antonio presents his Niece to the Count; Susan kneels, one of the Bridemaids gives the Count the nuptial Cap; and Susan, while the Count is placing it on her head, plucks him by the cloak, and shows him the Note she had just before written. He pretends to keep adjusting the Cap, and flily reaches to take the Note, which he instantly claps in his bosom, having previously unbuttoned bimself for that purpose. If hile this is transacting a Castanet-Dance is performed. As soon as Susan rises, she purposely places herself before the Countes, to encourage the Count to read the Note, who accordingly steps forward, is going to open it, and pricks his finger with the Pin, which he plucks out and throws angrily on the floor.)

Count. These Women and their curst Pins. Figaro. (Afide to bis Mother laughing) The Count has received a Billet-doux from some pretty Girl, sealed with a Pin! This is a new fashion, which he does not seem to admire. (The Count reads the Note, is exceedingly pleased, folds it up again, and reads on the outside, "Return the Scal;" be G 2 pretends pretends to walk carelefsly about the stage, but is all the while looking earnefily for the pin he had thrown away, which he at lest finds, picks up and sticks upon his Sleeve.)

Figaro. (To bis Mother) Every thing is precious that appertains to a beloved object.—He picks up the very Pin, you fee. (All this while Susan and the Countess remark what is passing with laughter, and private looks and gestures.)

Countefs. (Rifing) Come with me, Sufan. We fhall foon be back, my Lord, (Afide to Sufan) Let us make hafte and exchange dreffes.

(Exeunt Countess and Susan.

Crier. "Guards! Guards!—This way, Guards!
"(Places the Guards at the door, runs up to the "Count) My Lord, here's Mr. Bafil coming, my "Lord, with the whole Village at his heels, be"caufe he has been finging all the way he went. Figaro. "Orpheus and the Brutes. But I'll make "him change his Tune.

Enter BASIL singing, followed by BOUNCE.

Count. So, Mr. Bafil, what is your will and pleafure?

Bafil. " After having fulfilled your Lordship's " commands, by amufing this honest Gentle-" man----- Bounce. " Me, my Lord? I affire your Lord-

" fhip he has not amufed me in the leaft. Bafil. " I now return to enforce my claims on "Marcelina.

Figaro. "Look you, Sir—Should you venture " but to caft one look, or approach one ftep nearer " that Lady——

Dollor.

$A \quad C \quad O \quad M \quad E \quad D \quad Y. \qquad 8_5$

Dostor. " Let him speak, Figaro, let him speak. Guzman. " Oh f-f-sie!—What f-f-friends!— Figaro. " I disclaim such friendship. Basil. " And I—Error in Judgment, Mr.

President.

Figaro. "He!—A Street-corner Ballad-Bawler! Bafil. "As good, at least, as a Barber-Surgeon! Figaro. "Who hashes up a dinner out of Horse-

- " hair and Catgut ! Bafal. "Who has hungrily devoured Razors and
- "Hones, and fed half his life upon Froth! (Imitates beating up a Lather.) Figaro. "The high Priest of Pumps!

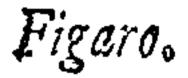

Basil. " The vile Drudge of Intrigue!

Figaro. " Execrated by those he ferves! Befil: "Gulled by his own Cunning! Figaro. " So great a Fool, Knavery itself cannot " make him thrive! Basil. "So stupid, he never yet could invent a " probable Lie! Doctor. Guzman. }" Hold, hold. Figura. " A Pedantic! B-fil. " Pert! Figaro. " Preposterous! Basil. " Pragmatical! Figaro. " Braying! Basil. " Lop-eared! Figaro. " Als! Count. "How now!-Is this all the Respect you " fhew ?---Bafil. "You hear, my Lord, how he infults me!

" When, it is well known, there is not, in all Anda-

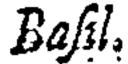

- " lufia, a more eminent!------
 - Figero. " Empty! Bafil. " Able!

G 3

Figaro. " Abject ! Bafil. " Musician! Figaro. " Milcreant! Basil. " Is this to be borne? Figero. " Whofe countenance prophecies of " Pillories, Scaffolds, and the ftretching of Hemp; " and whofe whole appearance is a continual Me-"mento of public Calamity, Plague, Pestilence, " and Famine; A Mifericordia, Sackcloth-and-" ashes Knave;-A Scape Goat, that looks like a Sew in the yellow Jaundice. (Doctor Bartholo and Don Guzman prevent Basil from falling upon Figaro.) Count. "Do you think this proper, Mr. Figaro? Figaro. "Why not, my Lord ?---Let him listen " to Truth, fince he is too Poor to pay Parafites se and Liars. Count. " Silence, Sir !- Let us hear, Mr. Basil, " what you have to fay. Basil. " (Composing bimself) I demand the hand " of Marcelina, my Lord, who promifed to " marry me. Marcelina. " On what condition was this pro-" mife made ? Bafil. " That I should adopt your lost Son, " if ever you should be happy enough to " find him. Marcelina. " Well. Doctor. " He is found. Bafil. "Where is he? Doctor. " Here he stands. (Pointing to Figuro). Guzman. " The-e-ere he ftands.

Basil. " He !- Oh, my curst Stars ! Guzman. " Do you re-e-nounce your pre-e-tenf tions to his de-e-ear Mother?

Basil. " Renounce !---As I would renounce the Gevil and all his Works.

Figaro. "What! Renounce your best Friend? "-But that's like your Rogue's tricks.

- Basil. " I will not live under the same roof
- " with him-I would rather even quit the fer-
- " vice of my Lord. Figaro. " Don't be uneasy, I shan't trouble you
- " long-Reftored to my Parents, and married to
- " my Susan, I shall retire and live in Peace. Count. " (Aside) And I shall retire to meet my
- " Mistrefs.

Guzman. " So every body is fa-a-tisfied." Count. Let the marriage Contracts be prepared, and I will fign them. Figaro. Thanks, gracious Lord. Bounce. And I will go and prepare the Fireworks in the Garden, near the Pavilion. Count. (Returning) Who, pray Sir, gave you those Orders?—The Countels is too much indifposed to come out; let them, therefore, be played off in front of the Castle, facing her Windows— (Afide)—The Rascal was going to set fire to my Place of Rendezvous! (Execunt).

Manent FIGARO and MARCELINA.

Figaro. How attentive he is to his Wife. Marcelina. " It is neceffary"—My dear Figaro, " I should undeceive thee respecting my former " false accusations of Susan—Basil has always told " me she obstinately resulted to listen to the " Count's Quertures and" I am both form and "Count's Overtures, and" I am both forry and afhamed to have excited thy Jealoufy. Figaro.

Figaro. Oh, be under no apprehensions, my dear Mother; Jealousy is the foolish Child of Pride, the Disease of a Madman-My Philoso. phy is invulnerable to its poisonous Arrows. (Figaro turns and sees Agnes just behind kim, coming down the Stage).—So! What you have been listening, my little inquistive Cousin?

Agnes. Oh, no; they tell me that is not polite.

Figaro. Then what's your errand?-He is not here.

Agnes. Who?

Fizaro. Hannibal.

Agnes. Oh, I know that very well-I know where he is-I want my Coufin Sufan.

Fizaro. Aye!-And what do you want with her?

Agnes. Not much; only to give her a Pin. Figaro. (Starts) A Pin ! (Striding about in great anger) A Pin !—And how dare you, you little Huffey, undertake fuch Meffages ?—What ! Have you learnt your trade already ?—(Marcelina makes a fign to Figaro, who recellets himfelf, and endeavours to difguif. his feelings)—Come, come, my pretty Coufin, don't be frighten'd, I was but in joke—I—I—I know all about it; its a Pin that my Lord has fent by you to Sufan.

Agnes. Since you know fo well, why need you alk me then?

Figaro. (Coaxing) Only to hear what my Lord faid when he fent thee on this errand.

Agnes, take this Pin to thy Coulin Sulan, and tell her it is the Seal of the new Song about the Twilight and the Pavilion. Figure. And the

Agnes,

Agnes. The Pavilion -And take great care, said he, that nobody fees thee.

Figaro. Well, well, I was but joking; go and execute thy Meffage faithfully, exactly as my Lord bade thee.

Agnes. Law! My Coulin takes me for a Ninny, I believe. (Exit skipping).

Figaro. So, my Mother ! Marcelina. So, my Son !

Figaro. Here's a sweet Daughter !- A delightful Bride!-And will be a most virtuous Wife -----(Walking up and down with great agitation)-----A false-Deceitful-I'm happy, however, I have found her out-I will detect, expose, and abandon her! Marcelina. Nay, but gently, my Son, gently; recollect that Jealoufy is the difease of a Madman, and that your Philosophy is invulnerable.-Fie! fie !- All this passion about a Pin !

Figaro. A Pin that has wounded me to the heart !-Didn't we see the Count pick it up ?

Marcelina. We did so; but how can we tell whether she means to deceive thee or him?-Art thou fure she will go to the Rendezvous; and wilt thou condemn her without hearing her?

Figaro. I am forry-I am a Fool-And yet!-If fhe fhould be falle!

Marcelina. Nay, but my dear Figaro-----Figaro. Well, well; I will be calm-Yes, my amorous Count, you will at least meet with somebody you don't expect-If you do not make hafte we shall be at the Pavilion as foon as your Lordship! (Exeunt).

The End of ACT IV.

ACT V.

SCENE, the Garden,

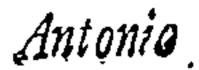

Wish walks of cut trees in the back ground, and two Pavilions, one on each fide of the ftage.

Enter AGNES. (A lanthorn in one hand, and two cakes and an orange in the other)

THE Pavilion to the left? Ay, that's it.— But if he fhould not come foon !—He has not half learnt me my part yet—Poor thing, he hasn't eat any thing all day; and the crofs, goodfor-nothing Cook would not give me a morfel for him; fo I was obliged to afk the Butler for thefe Cakes and this Orange :—It coft me a good kifs on the cheek, but I know who'll repay—Oh dear, here's fomebody coming !—

Enter FIGARO, difguised in a red Rocquela^{ure}; Doctor Bartholo, Don Guzman, Bassil, Antonio. Figaro imagines at first Agnes to be Susan; and, as it is too dark to see, endeavours to follow the sound of her voice, having entered while she was speaking. Agnes enters the Pavilion on the left.

Figaro. I was mistaken, 'tis Agnes! (They all grope down the ftage till they get round Fig.ro) What a clock is it?

Antonio. Almost near the moon's rising. Bosil. What a gloomy night.

Doctor. We look like fo many Conspirators.

Figaro. You understand, Gentlemen, why you are come hither—It is to be Witnesses of the Conduct of the virtuous Bride I am soon to espouse, and the honourable Lord who has graciously bestowed her upon me.

Basil. (Aside) This will be a precious Revenge. Dottor. Remember, Figaro, a wise Man has never any Contest with the Great; it is the Battle of Don Quixote with the Windmills; they whirl and dash you to a Distance, without once altering or retarding their Courfe. Figaro. Rather remember they have not courage to oppress any but Cowards. Doctor. He's mad. Guzman. Ye-e-es, he is ma-a-ad. Antonio. But what about? Basil. A certain Rendezvous;-Come this way, and I'll tell you the whole. Figaro. Hide yourfelves hereabouts, and come running the Moment you hear me call, Doctor. He is turning Fool. Guzman. Ye-e-es, he's turning foo-oo-ool-Stay and take ca-are of him, (Exeunt.

Manent Figaro and Doctor.

Figaro. "Oh Woman, Woman, Woman! Incon-"ftant, weak, deceitful Woman! - But each Animal

^{} is obliged to follow the inftinct of its Nature; and ^{} it is thine to betray !——What, after fwearing
^{} this very Morning to remain for ever Faithful;
^{} and on the identical Day ! The bridal Day !—— Doctor, "Patience.

Figara.

Figero. "I even faw her laugh with Delight, " while he read her Billet !---- They think them-" felves secure, but perhaps they yet may be de-" ceived." --- Ne, my very worthy Lord and Master, you have not got her yet --- What! Becaule vou are a great Man, you fancy yourself a great Genius.-" Which way?-How came you to " be the rich and mighty Count Almaviva? Why " truly, you gave yourfelf the Trouble to be born! "While the obscurity in which I have been cast " demanded more Abilities to gain a mere Sub-" fissence than are requisite to govern Empires. · And what, most noble Count, are your Claims " to Dislinction, to pompous Titles, and immense "Wealth, of which you are fo proud, and which, " by Accident, you poffels? For which of your " Virtues? Your Wildom? Your Generofity? "Your Juffice?--The Wildom you have ac-" quired confifts in vile Arts, to gratify vile " Passions; your Generosity is lavished on your " hireling Instruments, but whose Necessities make " them far lefs Contemptible than yourfelf; and " your Justice is the inveterate Persecution of " those who who have the Will and the Wit to " resist your Depredations." But this has ever been the Practice of the little Great; those they cannot degrade, they endeavour to crush. Doctor. Be advised, Figaro-be calm-there has ever been a Respect paid-

Figaro. To Vice—where it is not due.-Shame light on them that pay it.

Doctor. Consider, he is-

Figaro. A Lord---and I am---a Man!—Yes, I am 2 Man, but the nocturnal Spells of that enchantrefs Woman, foon fhall make me a Monfter. "Why, "what an Afs am I!—Acting here the idiot part of of a (Strikes bis forebead)—a—Huskand—Altho?

 I am but half finished." (Agnes peers out of the Pavilion, and approaches a little way to l sten.) Agnes. Is that Hannibal?

Docto: I hear fomebody! (Agnes bears the voice of the Doctor, and runs in again) I will retire, but if you are wife, you will wait the Event patiently; your fufpicions may be unjust,—should they prove real, then shake her from you, as her Ingratitude deferves. (Exit.

Tigaro. " Oh, how easy it is for the prayer mum-" bling Priest to bid the Wretch on the Rack suffer " patiently. (Figaro listens) I hear nothing-all is " filent-and dark as their defigns. (Figaro pulls " off his Roquelaure, and throws it on a Garden-tench) "Why, what a Defliny is mine-Am I for ever " doom'd to be the foot-ball of Fortune?-Son of "I knew not who, flol'n I knew not how, and " brought up to I knew not what, lying and thiev-"ing excepted, I had the fense, tho' young, to " delpife a life so base, and fled such infernal Tu-" tors. My Genius, tho' cramp'd, could not be "totally fubdued, and I fpent what little time " and money I could fpare in Books and Study. " Alas! it was but time and money thrown away. " Desolate in the world, unfriended, unprotected, " my poor ftock of knowledge not being whip'd " into me by the masculine hic hæc hoc hand of " a School-maiter, I could not get Bread, much " lefs Preferment.----Difheartened by the failure " of all my projects, I yet had the audacity to at" tempt a Comedy, but as I had the flill greater " audacity to attack the favorite Vice of the fa-" vorite Miftrefs, of the favorite Footman of the " favorite Minister, I could not get it licensed...... " It happened about that time, that the fashionable " Question of the day was an enquiry into the real " and

" and imaginary Wealth of Nations; and, as it is not " neceffary to possels the thing you write about, I, "with lank Cheeks, pennnylefs Purfe, and all the " fimplicity of a Boy, or a Philosopher, freely describ-" ed the true causes of national Poverty: when sud-" denly I was awaken'd in my bed at Mid-night, and " entrusted to the tender care of his Catholic Ma-" jefty's Mirmidons, whole Magic-power cauled " the heavy gates of an old Caftle to fly open at "my approach, where I was gracioufly received, "lodged, and ornamented, according to the "fashion of the place, and provided with Straw, " and Bread, and Water gratis. My ardor for " Liberty fufficiently cool'd. I was once more turn-"ed adrift into the wide World, with leave to pro-"vide Straw and Bread and Water for myself. "-On this my fecond birth, I found all Madrid " in Raptures, concerning a most generous Royal " Edist, lately published, in favor of the Liberty of "the Prefs: and I foon learnt, that, provided I " neither spoke of the Wealth of Nations in my " writings, nor of the Government, nor of Religion, " nor of any Corporate-Companies, nor offended " the favorite Mistress of the Minister's favorite "Footman, nor said any one thing which could " be twifted into a reference, or hint, derogatory to " any one Individual, who had more powerful friends " than I had, I was at liberty to write, freely, all, " and whatever I pleased, under the inspection of " fome two or three Cenfors! ---- Soon after this, " a Place happened to be vacant, which required "a perfon well acquainted with Calculation; I

" offered my Services; my Abilities were not queftioned; I waited, in anxious expectation of the Event, and, in three days, learnt it had been beftowed, two days before, upon a Dancing-mafter.— Perfe-

" Persecuted by Creditors, tired of starving, and " unable, through the feebleness of Youth to ful-"tain fo unequal a Struggle, I had the weak-"nefs, at last, to fink before Temptation, and set " up a Pharaoh Bank. And now, for once, behold "the Scene changed! See me equally familiar " with Lords as with their Lacquies! Every door was " open to me! Every hand heldout! But, notwith-" ftanding my defire to be Something in this world, "my deteftation of the brazen Effrontery, pro-" found Ignorance, and insupportable Insolence of "thefe fashionable Friends of Nobility was so innate ' that I found I could better endure all the Miferies " of Poverty than the Difgrace and Difgust of such "Society.-Quitting, therefore, with contempt this " new Trade, and leaving false Shame behind me, as " a burthen too heavy for a Foot-passenger, I once "more took up my strap and hone, and travelled "for employment from Town to Town.----At "Seville I found a Lord mad to marry his Mif-"trefs; my Wit procured him what his could not, " a Wife; and, in return, he gratefully endeavours "to Seduce mine-Strange concatenation of cir-"cumstance! My Parents all at once claim me! "-'Tis he, 'tis she, 'tis me, 'tis-I don't know "who!-I came into the world without my "Knowledge, and I shall go out on't without my "Will; and thus do I continue to torment my-" self about this Being of mine, without under-"ftanding what this Being is, what it was, what " it shall be, whence it came, where it is, or whi-

" ther it fhall go.—I only know it to be a com-" pound of Contradictions! A little, wife, foolifh " Animal, ardent in the purfuit of Pleafure, caprici-" ous through Vanity, laborious from Necessity, but " indolent

THE FOLLIES OF A DAY. 95

" indolent by Choice. After having exhausted "every Art for enjoyment, and every Profession " for a livelihood, I found myself intoxicated by a " heavenly Illusion, that has vanish'd at my " approach! - Vanished!-And is it vanish'd ?"-Oh Sufan ! Sufan ! (Figaro finks melancholy upon the garden-seat; but being suddenly roused by a noife, wraps himself up in his Rocquelaure.

Enter sofely, in each other's dress, the COUNTESS and SUSAN, followed by MARCELINA.

Susan. So Figaro is to be here. (In an under voice)

Marcelina. He is here.

Susan. Thus one is come to lay the Springe, and the other to seize the Game.

Marcelina. I will go and hide myself in this Pavilion, where I shall hear all. (Exit into the Pavilion on the left.)

Susan. We may begin. (Speaks louder) If my Lady does not want me, I will walk and enjoy the fresh air.

Fig.aro. Oh, the Cocatrice. Counte/s. It may give thee cold. Susan. Oh no, my Lady. Figaro. Ch no! She'll not take cold to-night. (Afide). Susan retires a little towards the Pavilion on the left; Hanni'al is heard finging, and, as he enters, perceives the Countes, in Susan's dress. Page. Is that Agnes, yonder? (He approaches)

By

97

By her long Lappets and white Feathers, it must be Susan. (Comes up and takes hold of the Countess's hand) Ah, my dear Susan!

Countess. Let me go. (In a feigned voice.)

Page. Come, Come; don't be fo coy. I know it is not Figaro you are waiting for, it is my Lord the Count—What! Did not I hear; this Morning, when I was behind the great Chair?

Susan. (Aside). The babbling little Villain.

Enter the COUNT behind, and hears the Page.

Count. Is not that fomebody with Sufan?-(Advances clofe up to them, and draws back in a fury). -'Tis that infernal Page again. (Sufan keeps out of the way and filently laughing.) Page. 'Tis in vain to fay no:-Since thou art going to be the Reprefentative of the Countefs, I am determined to give the one kifs for thyfelf, and a hundred for thy beauteous Lady.

Súsan. (Aside). " As impudent as a Page, says the Proverb."

(The Countess draws back to avoid being kissed by the Page, and the Count advances and presents himself in her place; the Page feels the rough beard of the Count, and suddenly retreats, crying in an under voice)—Oh, the Devil !—The Count again !

(Exit Page into the Pavilion on the left.) (While this passes, Figaro likewise advances to drive the Page from Susan; meanwhile the Count, on the Page's supposed next approach, prepares to give him a proper reception). Count. (Thinking he speaks to the Page). Since you are so fond of kissing, take that. (Gives Figaro a severe box on the ear): H Figaro.

Figaro. I have paid for liftening. (Sufan cannot contain berfelf, but burfts out a laughing). Count. (Hears her laugh). Why this is inconceiveable !-Do fuch Satutations make the impudent Rafcal laugh ?

Figaro. It would be strange if he should cry this time. (Aside).

(Count and Countess approach).

Count. But let us not lose the precious moments, my charming Susan!—Let these Kisses speak my ardour! (Kisses the Counters feveral times with rapture).

Figaro. (Afide, and beating his forehead). Oh! Oh! Oh!

Count. Why doft thou tremble?

Countess. (Continuing ber feigned voice). Because I am afraid.

Count. Thou feemeft to have got a cold. (Takes the Countefs's hand between his own, and amoroufly strokes and kiffes her fingers). What a fweet, delicate, Angel's hand !—How fmooth and foft !—How long and fmall the fingers !—What pleafure in the touch !—Ah ! How different is this from the Countefs's hand !—

Countefs. (Sighing). And yet you loved her once.

Count. Yes-Yes-I did fo-But three Years of better Acquaintance has made the Marriage-ftate to refpectable-And then Wives are fo lovingwhen they do love, that is-that one is furprifed when in fearch of Pleafure, to find Satiety. Countefs. Pleafure?-Love!

Count. Oh, no; Love is but the Romance of the Heart; Pleasure is its History—As for thee, my dear Susan, add but one grain more of Caprice to to thy Composition and thou wilt make one of the most enticing, teazing, agreeable Mistresses. Countess. 'Tis my Duty to oblige my Lord. Figaro. Her Duty!--

Countess. Nothing?

Count. It is not our Faults; 'tis the law of Nature—And then Wives think to enfure our fidelity by being always Wives—Whereas they flould fometimes become—Cruntefs. What?

Count. Our Mistresses I hope thou wilt not forget this Leffon. Countess. Oh no, indeed, not I. Susan. (Aloud). Nor I. Figaro. (Aloud). Nor I. Count. (Aftonifhed). Are there Echoes here? Countess. Oh, yes, Count. And now, my sweet Susan, receive the Portion I promised thee. (Gives a purse and puts a ring upon her finger)-And continue likewise to wear this Ring for my fake. Countess. Sufan accepts your Favors, Figaro. (Afide). Was there ever so faithles a Huffey ? Susan. (Aside). These riches are all for us! (Still keeps cluckling very heartily at what is going forwards.)

Counte/s. I perceive Torches. Count. They are preparatory to thy Nuptials. (the Countefs pretends to be afraid). Come, come, let us retire for a moment into the Pavilion. Countefs. What! In the dark? Count. Why not? There are no Spirits. Figaro. (Afide). Yes, but there are; and evil ones H 2 too:

too. (Countels follows the Count). She is going !------Hem ! (Figaro kem's in a great passion). Count. (Raising kis voice majesterially). Who goes there !

Figaro. A man.

Count. (Afide to the Countefs). It's Figaro! (The Countefs enters the Pavilion on the right hand and the Count retires).

Figaro. (Desperate). They are gone in. (Walks about). Let her go-Let her go !

Sujan. (Afide.) Thou shalt pay prefently for these fine Suspicions. (Susan advances and mimics the roice of the Countess). Who is that?

Figaro. 'Tis the Countefs (Afide).—What lucky Chance conducted you hither, Madam---You know not what Scenes are this moment transacting.

Sufan. Oh yes, but I do, Figaro.

Figaro. What! That the Count and my very virtuous Bride are this moment in yonder Pavilion Madam!

Susan. (Aside). Very well, my Gentleman !---I know more than thou dost.

Figaro. And will you not be revenged?

Susan. Oh yes, we always have our Revenge in our own power.

Figuro. (Afide). What does fhe mean ?---Perhaps what I fulpect---Why that would be a glorious Retaliation.---(To Sufan) There is no Means but one, Madam, of revenging fuch Wrongs; that now prefents itfelf.

Sufan. (Jealous) What does the good-for-nothing Feliow mean? (Speaks in a tone of compliance to Figaro). Does it Figaro? Figaro. Pardon my Prefumption, Madam! On any other occasion, the Respect I bear your Ladyship would keep me filent, but on the present I dare encounter all! (Falls on kis knees). Oh, excuse, cuse, forgive me, Madam; but let not the precious moments slip!---Grant me your hand.

A C O M E D Y. IOF

Susan. (Unable any longer to contain herself gives him a slap on the face). Take it.

Figaro I have it, I think !--- The Devil ! This is the Day of Stripes !

Sufan. Sufan gives it thee (as foon as Figaro hears it is Sufan, his fatisfaction is fo extreme, he laughs very heartily, and keeps laughing all the while fhe keeps beating him) and that, and that, and that, and that for thy Infolence—And that for thy Jealoufy—And that for thy Infidelity (Sufan out of breath, Figaro ftill laughing.) Figaro. Oh happy Figaro—Take thy Revenge, my dear, kind, good Angel; Never did Man or Martyr fuffer with fuch Extacy! Sufan. Don't tell me of your Extacy! How durft you, you good for nothing, hafe, falfe-hearted Man, make love to me, fuppofing me the Countefs.

Figaro. I must bring myself off, (afide)—Dost think I could mistake the music of my Susan's Voice?

Susan. What, you pretend you knew me then? Figaro. Pretend! Canst thou doubt it? Susan. And this was a Trick upon me !-But I'll be revenged.

Figaro. Talk not of Revenge, my Love, but tell me what bleft Angel fent thee hither, and how thou cameft by this Difguife, which fo fully proves thy Innocence!

Susan. " I could find in my Heart not to tell "thee; but know, to thy Confusion, it is my La" dy's; and that, coming to catch one Fox, we have " entrapped two! Figaro. " But who has taken the other ? Su an. " His Wife.

Figaro "His Wife!-Go and hang thyfelf, Fi-" garo-Go and hang thyfelf, for wanting the Wit " to divine this Plot !--- And has all this intriguing * been about his Wife? Susan. "Yes, about his Wife. Figaro. (a little suspicious) "But who did the " Page kils ? Susan. "The Count. Figero. " The Count! Ha! ha! ha! that is " excellent, (E.e.fuming his gravity) But who did the " Count kifs? Sulan. " The Countels. Figaro. " Ay, but who did he kils this Morn-" ing _____ behind the great Chair ?

Susan. (Gravely) "Nobody. Figero. " Art thou-quite fure?" Susan. (Holding out ber Hand) Dost thou want another Proof?

Figaro. Ah! Thine are but proofs of Love-That of the Count, indeed, was not fo gentle.

Enter COUNT behind.

Count. 'St-'it! Sufan !-Sufan !

Figaro. (issue to Susan) A lucky thought strikes me; prithee second me, Susan, (Speaks in a feigned Foice, falls on his Knees and kisses Susan's Hand)-Ah Madam! Let us not longer converse of Love, but enjoy it's Treasures.

Gount. What's here ! A Man on his Knees to the Counters!-(Feels for bis Sword, they keep filently laughing) And I unarm'd!

Figaio. (Alting the Petit Maitre) Upon my Honour, Madam, I could not have supposed Timidity should make you hesitate a moment.

Count.

Count. (Furioufly) So this is our Dreffing-room Gentleman, at latt! I fhall know all at leaft, now— (Figaro kiffes ber hand again.) Oh Rage! Oh Hell! Sufan How delightfully he fwears.

Figaro. (Figaro and Susan still inwardly laughing) Quickly then, Madam, let us repair the wrong which Love this Morning fuffered at the impertinent intrusion of your Lord.

Count. This is not to be borne (Darts between them, feizes Figaro by the Collar, while Sufan escapes into the Pavilion on the left.) Figaro (Pretends amazement) My Lord! Count. How! Raical! And is it you!-Hollo-Hollo-Who hears?

Enter blundering in the dark, and in a great hurry, the COURIER, who had been to Seville after the Page.

Courier. Here !--Here !--Here am I, my Lord! Just arrived from Seville! But he is not there! I might as well have fought for this Page in my pocket! Here is the Packet again. Count. Stand out of the way, Rascal----Hollo! --Where are my People? Lights! Lights! Courier. What's my Lord astraid of? Is there not Mr. Figaro and I?

Enter Flambeaux, Don GUZMAN, Dr. BAR-THOLO, ANTONIO, BASIL, and Servants.

Count. (To the Servants) Guard that Door and fome of you feize this Fellow. Figaro. You command, with abfolute Authority; over all present, my Lord, except yourself. Count. " The Villain's impenetrable, cool Im-" pudence is intolerable.

Fizare.

Figaro. "We are not Soldiers, that we should "kill one another without Malice: for my part, I "like to know why I am angry."

Count. Be pleased, Sir, to declare, before this Company, who the—the—Woman is that just now ran into that Pavilion.

Fizaro. Into that - (Going to cross to the Pavilion on the right.)

Count.'(Scopping bim) No, prevaricating Fiend; into that. (Pointing to the other.)

Figaro. Ah! That alters the Cafe. Count. Answer, or— Figuro 6 The Lady that escaped into Figaro. " The Lady that escaped into that Pavilion?

Count. " Ay, Demon, the Lady.

Figaro. The Lady "that escaped into that Pa-"vilion," is a young Lady to whom my Lord once paid his Address, but who, happening to love me more than my Betters, has this day yielded me the Preference.

Count. The Preference !- The Preference !- he does not lie at leaft. Yes, Gentlemen, what he confesses, I pledge my Honour I just have heard from the very mouth of his Accomplice !

Guzman. His Accomplice! Count. Come forth, Madam! (Enters the Pavilion.)

Bafil. Which of these two has made a-Gentleman of the other.

Figaro. Perhaps neither.

Count. (In the Pavilion.) Come forth, I fay, fhew yourfelf. (Enter, dragging out the PAGE, ftill fpeaking. and not looking at bim till be gets on a line with the reft of the Company.) Happily, Madam, there is no Piedge of a Union, now fo justly detefted.

Omnes. The Page !

Guzman. (After all the rest.) The Pa-a-age! Count. Again! And again! And everlastingly this damn'd, diabolical Page. (Page flies to the other side of the stage.) You shall find, however, he was not alone.

Page. Ah, no! My lot would have been hard indeed then.

Count. Enter Antonio, and drag the guilty Thing before her Judge.

Antonio. (In the Pavilion.) Come, Madam, you must come out; I must not let you go fince my Lord knows you are here.

Enter with his Daughter, AGNES.

Onnes. Agnes ! Guzman. A-A-Agnes!

Antonio. Odzooks, my Lord, its a pleafant Trick, enough, to send me in, before all these good Folks, for my Daughter.

Count. I'll find her, I warrant. (Going.) Doctor. (Stopping the Count.) Pardon me, my Lord, but you are too angry at present; let me go. (Exit Doctor to the Pavilion.)

Guzman. This Caufe is very perplex'd. Doctor. (Entering with Marcelina.) Fear nothing, Madam, fear nothing.

Omnes. Marcelina]

Figaro. My Mother too! Ha! ha! ha! ha! ha! Count. Where then is this Daughter of Infamy who thus evades my just Fury?

Enter SUSAN, with her Fan before her face.

Here she comes, at last; bearing her own Shame and my Dishonour. (Susan kneels to him, still hiding her Face.) Ţ Omnes. Pardon, pardon, gracious Lord! Count. No! No! No! (They all fall on their knees.) No! No! Were the World to kneel I would be deaf.

Enter the COUNTESS from the Pavilion on the right, and kneels to the Count, whose back is turned to her.

Countess. At least I will make one of the Number. (Susan drops her fan, the Count hears the voice of the Countess, looks round, and suddenly conceives the whole Trick they have been playing him. All the Company burft into a laugh: the Count's shame, confusion, &c.) Guzman. (Laughing stupidly) Ha! ha! ha! ha! 'Tis the Countefs! Count. (With great bumility.) And-is it you my Lady? Countess. (Inclines her body in token of Affirmation.) Count. (Returning her bow with great confusion.) Ah !-Yes !- Yes ! A generous pardon-tho' unmerited.-----Countefs. Were you in my place, you would exclaim, No! No! No! But I grant it without a fingle Stipulation.

Susan. And I.

Figaro. And I.-There are Echoes here,

Count. (Surprised) I perceive-I perceive-I have been nightly ferved.

Countefs. Here, Susan, here is the Purse and Ring, which my Lord gave thee. He will remember thy sweet delicate Fingers, so long and so small. Susan. Thank your Lordship—Here Figaro. (Gives bim the Purse.

Figaro. It was devilish hard to get at-Count. (To Susan) And the Letter you wrote-Susan. Was dictated by my Lady.

$\mathbf{A} \in \mathbf{C} \cup \mathbf{M} \in \mathbf{D} \setminus \mathbf{Y}$. 107

Count. (Smiling good naturedly.) Well, well! I am an Answer in her Debt.

Figaro. Thus every Man shall have his own. Bounce. And shall we throw the Stocking? Countefs. There is the Garter. (Throws down the Riband Hannibal had stolen in the Morning; Bounce is going to stoop for it, and the Page pushes him back.)

Page. This is my Right, and if any one dare dispute it with me-

Count. Indeed! Mr. Officer—So bold a Champion already!—Pray how did your Valour like the Box on the Ear I gave you just now ?

Page. (With his Hand to his Sword) Me! My Colonel? Figaro. Which I kindly received. Count. Thou ! Figaro. I-And thus do the Great distribute Justice. Count. (laugking) Well, Mr. Prefident, (Don Guzman instantly calls up all his Wisdom on finding bimself addressed) what do you think of all these things? Guzman. Thi-ink, my Lord? (Confiders) I-I think that-1 do-o-on't know what to think. Figaro. I think, a few fuch Days as this would form an excellent Ambassador-But lately I was a poor, deferted, folitary Being, in this wide World, and now I have Gold, Relations, and a handfome Wife-----Doctor. And Friends will flock in abundance. Figaro. Do you think fo?

Doctor. Oh I know fo. Figaro. Well, let them, they shall be welcome to all I have—My Wife and my Wealth excepted. Sufan.

ډ

Sufan. Our Errors past, and all our Follies done, Oh! That 'twere possible you might be won To pardon Faults, and Misdemeanors smother, With the same ease we pardon One-another! So should we rest, To-night, devoid of Sorrow, And hope to meet you, joyously, To-morrow.

THE END.

•

_